That Representation Of Foreign Policy Is 'a Deliberate Lie,' President Declares

By Robert C. Albright.

President Roosevelt yesterday denounced as a "deliberate lie" published statements that he said the Rhine was the frontier of the United States or that America's frontier was France.

He said this nation's foreign policy was unchanged. America's 4-point policy, he said, opposes any entangling alliances, favors world trade for all nations, favors efforts toward limitation of arms, and is sympathetic toward peaceful maintenance of political, economic and social independence of all nations.

His restatement of foreign policy brought quick indorsement from Chairman Pittman, of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, who declared it should "absolutely remove any fear that our President is going down the road towards war."

Comment Guarded

Pittman, who remained through the White House press conference, said "it may be reasonably inferred that neither the President nor the American people are in sympathy with the destruction of the political independence of any nation by force of arms or threats of the use of force of arms."

The President's strong denunciation of conflicting statements attributed to him after a conference with the Senate Military Affairs Committee last Tuesday was received with guarded comment by members of the committee.

"My only comment is the question: 'Was the President asked at the foreign affairs conference where the frontier of the United States is located?'" said Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, who attended the conference and later protested secret proceedings.

Senator Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, who also attended the conference, said he did not remember any mention of the Rhine, "but there was some discussion of the first line of defense being Great Britain and France."

Favors Democracies

"Something was said about the first line of defense, but I do not recall exactly what it was or who said it," Logan told reporters. "I left the conference with the definite impression that the President favors the democracies over the totalitarian states and that our interests lie with the democracies. The President didn't go as far as I would go."

Senator Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma, a strong supporter of the President's policies, said "evidently someone has been talking when he should have been listening.

"The President is perfectly capable of explaining his own state-

Pay-Hour Chief's Wandering Boy Still Jump Ahead

Still a jump behind, Elmer F. Andrews, wage-hour administrator, yesterday doggedly kept up the pursuit by telephone of his son, William R., 18, missing from the University of Pennsylvania since Monday.

Leaving the Wharton School at the university after mid-term examinations, the wandering boy turned up first visiting friends at Albany, N. Y. Next he was located at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., then at Springfield, Mass.

Friends of the administrator said he was in no way worried about his son's sudden departure from school, explaining the youth once traveled alone to Europe and back.

Administration's Foreign Policy

President Roosevelt, saying "the (foreign) policy has not changed, and is not going to change," gave reporters this "comparatively simple statement" of the policy:

"No. 1. We are against any entangling alliances, obviously.

"No. 2. We are in favor of the maintenance of world trade for everybody—all nations—including ourselves.

"No 3. We are in complete sympathy with any and every effort made to reduce or limit armaments.

"No. 4. As a Nation—as American people—we are sympathetic with the peaceful maintenance of political, economic and social independence of all nations in the world."

Nazis Charge President With Hypocrisy

Roosevelt Was 'Scared' Into Denying Frontier Remark, Goering Says

By the United Press.

Berlin (Saturday), Feb. 4.—Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering's newspaper said today that President Roosevelt's denial that he had designated the Rhine as America's new frontier of defense was a unique example of "political hypocrisy" compelled by world-wide indignation.

The National Zeitung of Essen, which speaks for Germany's No. 2 Nazi leader, said that Mr. Roosevelt's branding of the frontier report as a deliberate lie was "one of the first official acts of the American President in which his arrogance and self-assurance were lacking."

The newspaper said the fact that the President "had to disclaim his own words at the last moment" proved that the American people still think peacefully and soberly despite incitement by a "warlike" leader.

Denial Called Hypocrisy

"While his anti-peace speech before the (Senate) Military Affairs Committee was a considerable mistake, his defense against universal indignation is a unique curiosity in the history of political hypocrisy," the newspaper said.

The paper revealed a Nazi conviction that the President actually did make the statement. It came shortly after a semi-official foreign office announcement and a speech by Rudolf Hess, deputy leader of the Nazi party, had castigated Mr. Roosevelt "and his Jewish clique."

The National Zeitung, referring to the President's sharp denial in Washington, said:

"Apparently he was scared; never before has the known opposition at home arisen against him.

$200 Reward For Hit-Run Killer of Boy

Son of Rep. Caldwell Run Down in Mist by Black Coupe; Is 9th Auto Fatality in 1939

A black coupe flashed out of yesterday morning's mist on Connecticut avenue and struck down a 12-year-old boy on his way to school. It dragged the boy 50 feet, freed him, raced on. The boy struggled to his knees, then fell again—dead of a skull fracture.

Last night rewards totaling $200 and a proposal to have the House District Committee increase them to $1,200, were made for the arrest and conviction of the hit-and-run driver who killed Millard Fillmore Caldwell, jr., son of Representative Millard F. Caldwell, of Florida.

Early this morning eight automobiles and a truck, all damaged in front, were impounded by police and two men were held for investigation. All day long telephone calls poured into headquarters and into Eighth Precinct Station from citizens anxious to report knowledge of automobiles suspiciously damaged.

All of these calls were checked by detectives and every report was run down until it proved fruitless. Search for the killer continued without abatement through hour after hour of disheartening failure.

The fatality was the ninth of the year. There were other traffic injuries as the day drew on. Frank Keely, 46, of 1020 Upshur street northeast, is in serious condition at Casualty Hospital. Roger Mills, 9, of the Episcopal Home, Nebraska and Utah avenues, northwest, is in Georgetown Hospital with head and internal injuries.

Police Send Alarm

Aroused by the callousness of young Caldwell's killer, Maj. Ernest W. Brown mobilized all police and detective agencies in the search. Immediate radio alarms were sent into surrounding States, and garages and other likely places were searched for a late model black coupe.

Later in the day, in order to encourage citizens as well as police to be on the lookout for clues, Maj. Brown posted a reward of $100 for arrest of the motorist. This was augmented by a further reward of $100 by Arthur Godfrey, announcer of Station WJSV.

Proposal to increase the total reward to $1,200 came as fellow members of Congress learned of the tragedy with the boy's father. Representative James Seccombe (Republican), of Ohio, announced that he would propose to the District Committee on Wednesday morning a reward of $1,000.

Watchman Sees Death

D. A. Perry, night watchman in an apartment house at 2701 Connecticut avenue, told police he had seen young Caldwell shortly after 7, kneeling in the midst of the street and thought he was tying his shoe laces. The next time he looked the boy had collapsed in the street and was obviously dying as he reached his side at almost the same time as a cab driver. Death occurred before the arrival of the ambulance.

Millard was a native of Milton, Fla., where funeral services will be held. He had been appointed a page temporarily by Representative Cox, of Georgia, and was reported to be one of the most promising pupils at the pages' school.

Poland Gets Loan To Buy U. S. Goods

By the United Press.

The Export-Import Bank has extended a $6,000,000 credit to Poland to buy American cotton and copper, it was learned last night. The loan is guaranteed by the National Economic Bank of Warsaw and is repayable within nine months.

9 Drown in Chesapeake Gale; West Virginia Flood Kills 5

Scores Driven From Homes in Ohio And Tennessee Valleys; Sailor Lost Off Cape Cod as Ship Is Grounded; Louisville and Cincinnati Threatened

At least 18 persons were dead and scores were being driven from their low-lying homes by rising rivers and streams in the Ohio and Tennessee valleys yesterday as a heavy wind and rain storm raced north from Texas across the entire Eastern half of the United States.

The storm, momentarily turning into a roaring cyclone, struck full force a fleet of 20 oyster boats in the Choptank River, off Chesapeake Bay, capsizing three vessels and drowning 9 Maryland fishermen.

One man was lost and six rescued when the 135-foot British motor vessel Lutzen went aground in the fog 2 miles north of Old Harbor Coast Guard station, on Nauset Beach, Cape Cod.

In the Ohio Valley, at Clarksburg and Danville, W. Va., five persons were trapped in swirling river waters.

Families, Merchants Flee

Families and merchants hurriedly evacuated lower sections of Point Pleasant, W. Va., as weather observers predicted the Ohio River, would rise to 47 feet—7 feet above flood stage—in the night.

The heavy rains and Anacostia River flooded roads at Bladensburg Peace Cross, and at 7 p. m. Bladensburg road was reported impassable, with police detouring traffic through Rhode Island avenue. The road was 18 inches under water.

Although it was reported from Kitzmiller, Md., that the Potomac was 12 feet above normal stage at night fall and still rising, Weather Bureau officials here said no dangerous conditions were observed by their stations and added that the Potomac was close to normal despite the rain.

Coast Guard communications revealed here last night that a twister of cyclonic force struck off Cape May, with the wind jumping from 20 to 70 miles an hour. Although the twister lasted only 2 minutes, it blew down telephone poles and wires, and damaged the dirigible hangar at Sewell's Point.

Capt. Theodore Woodland, Emerson Wingate, mate, and two colored sailors were drowned when the oyster vesel Annie Lee went down in the Choptank River. Capt. William Bradford and four sailors went down with the Agnes. Three of the Agnes crew were identified as Aaron Ennals, Rodney Jones and Robert Elliott. The Annie Lee sailors were Clem Roberts and a man known only as "Jim."

George Wheatley, of the Annie Lee, was rescued by Capt. William Hubbard of the Geneva May. Four men aboard the Nora managed to reach the shore when their vessel capsized.

Rain Causes Slides in Mountains

The British freighter, out of St. John's, Newfoundland, went aground off Cape Cod, and an unidentified member of the crew perished before Coast Guardsmen could reach the vessel in a surf boat. The ship was owned by Northwestern Steamship, Limited.

The West Virginia State Road Commission reported four persons were drowned at the little town of Danville when Coal River submerged half the community. Five hundred persons had to leave their homes. John W. White, 80, retired farmer, was found dead in swollen Rooting Creek, at Clarksburg. A boy, James M. Harless, was killed in a gas explosion when a landslide broke a line near Branchland, W. Va.

In the Ohio Valley the weather bureau issued warnings of river stages ranging from 50 to 55 feet for the 250 miles of the Ohio between Huntington, W. Va., and Carrollton, Ky., and of 43 to 44 feet for the stretch between Evansville, Ind., and Cairo, Ill.

One to four inches of rain and as much as 6 inches of snow pushed tributaries beyond their banks, drove lowland dwellers from their homes, closed roads and schools, and caused dozens of dangerous rock slides in mountain sections.

Pittsburgh expected the Ohio to reach its 25-foot flood level early this morning, and officials said it would rise even more. The river topped a 35-foot flood stage at Evansville, Ind. In the upper Ohio Valley, which has a flood level of 52 feet, the river was due to rise to 55 feet by tomorrow.

Government Meteorologist W. C. Deveraux predicted a crest of 55 feet where the Ohio River passes through Cincinnati, 3 feet above flood stage. Cincinnati Red Cross officials planned to man 50 boats in case of flood. Louisville's flood height of 28 feet was foreseen by Sunday, with an unofficial forecast of more rain Monday and Tuesday.

Officials at Portsmouth, Ohio, one of the hardest hit cities in the 1937 flood, ordered four flood stations into operation to clear off the excess water. Newport, Ky., authorities met to consider means of combatting a possible flood.

Kentucky Governor Prepares

Gov. A. B. Chandler, of Kentucky, ordered State highway maintenance crews in flood-threatened areas to be ready to give aid and offered to send National Guardsmen if needed. Gov. Homer A. Holt of West Virginia took similar action.

Williamson, W. Va., was isolated, with all highways leading into the city blocked by water or landslides.

Precipitation of more than an inch was recorded in Maryland and Washington.

At Winchester, Va., streams overflowing into the bottom lands caused apprehension among the residents of the sector. The Shenandoah was 8 feet above normal from Riverton, Va., to Harpers Ferry, W. Va., with lowlands flooded. Coeburn, Va., suffered severe damage from Clinch River, with the water 2 feet high in the business district. Families in South Coeburn were forced to flee. Earth slides made roads impassable in Buchanan and Dickenson Counties, Va.

Gap Run, Hogue Creek and other western Frederick County streams in Virginia were over their banks and still rising. Fears were held that

Sasscer Wins Congress Seat By 5-to-1 Vote

Love Concedes; Complete Returns 23,816 to 5,224

With complete unofficial returns indicating his defeat by almost 5 to 1, A. Kingsley Love, Republican, last night conceded election of Lansdale G. Sasscer, of Upper Marlboro, to represent Maryland's Fifth District in the House.

Returns unofficially compiled from all precincts in the district, showed 23,816 for Sasscer, former State Senator, and 5,224 for Love. Sasscer supporters pointed out the late Representative Stephen Gambrill's heaviest majority over Love in past elections was 2 to 1.

From his Leonardtown home, Love told The Post last night he had no statement.

Congratulates Winner

"You can say, though," he added, "that I want to congratulate Mr. Sasscer on a fine victory."

The special election for the district, which includes Prince Georges, Howard, St. Marys, Charles, Calvert and Anne Arundel counties and part of Baltimore City, was called to fill the House seat left vacant by the death of Mr. Gambrill. No votes were cast for Alden A. Potter, an independent candidate living in the Sixth Congressional District.

Balloting, which followed a campaign entirely without aggressive effort on the part of any candidate, was unprecedentedly light. High winds and chilly rain throughout the district combined with apparent lack of interest to hold the vote to a record low figure.

Baltimore Vote Light

Baltimore's 37 precincts included in the special election, for instance, have a total registration of 29,082. The vote cast there totaled only 3,151.

Totals in the counties were, Prince Georges, 9,698; St. Marys, 1,825; Charles, 1,970; Calvert, 1,684; Anne Arundel, 7,017, and Howard, 2,282.

In Prince Georges 34 precincts, 8,556 votes were cast for Sasscer and 1,142 for Love.

Corcoran Reported Resting Comfortably

Baltimore, Feb. 3 (AP).—Thomas Corcoran, special counsel to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, rested comfortably at the Johns Hopkins Hospital today after a successful operation for removal of his appendix.

The operation was performed by Dr. Warfield Firor, who said: "It was a perfectly simple appendectomy. There were no complications and the operation was successful."

Goebbels Scores 'Society Rabble' For Quips at Nazis

Berlin, Feb. 3 (U.P.).—Propaganda Minister Goebbels today blasted Germany's cafe society, which he called "society rabble and intellectual snobs," for laughing at comedians who make Nazi leaders the butts of their jokes.

Goebbels turned his anger upon the "society rabble" after announcing that five German actors had been banned from the stage for publicly ridiculing Nazi Party and state functionaries. He said humor in Nazi Germany must be kept "good-naturad, decent and clean."

The five actors were Werner Finck, actor-author; Peter Sachse, vaudeville comedian, and Helmut Buth, Wilhelm Meissner and Manfred Diugi.

Seal's Office Placed Under Hazen Control

Second Commissioner Formerly Supervised Corporation Counsel

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal and his aides, for the past six years under supervision of the second civilian District Commissioner, have been placed under supervision of Commissioner Hazen, chairman of the board, it was learned yesterday.

Without a second civilian Commissioner since the resignation of George E. Allen September 1, 1938, the office has been without an active head since that time.

The move was approved by Commissioner Hazen and Lieut. Col. David McCoach, jr., engineer commissioner.

Under the District setup, of the three Commissioners, two are appointed from the civilian ranks and the third from the Corps of Army Engineers. All are appointed by the President.

Already under Commissioner Hazen are the police and fire departments, the auditor, assessor and collector of taxes. All engineering departments are under Col. McCoach.

However, when Commissioner Allen resigned, the departments under him, health, welfare and corporation counsel, among others, were thrust, for the time being, on Commissioners Hazen and McCoach.

All attorneys under Corporation Counsel Seal are in the non-civil service category, it was pointed out, so their status was not changed.

Inside Numbers Racket Story Disclosed to Warring Jurors

How a big numbers lottery works was revealed yesterday to the 14 District Court jurors trying the Warring brothers for conspiracy to defraud the Government of income taxes on their profits.

Agents H. Watson Leese and William H. F. Swain testified to their findings when they delved into the accounts of the $2,000,000 a year racket in an effort to harmonize the modest incomes reported by the brothers with the huge receipts other evidence indicated they had. The agents were the only witnesses yesterday.

Leese and Defense Counsel Harry T. Whelan, who spent Thursday afternoon in a furious cross-examination duel, devoted yesterday morning to a return bout, from which the slender little revenue agent emerged pugnacious and still unshaken as to the facts he said he remembered.

"Where did you get those figures?" Whelan once demanded after Leese reeled off a long string of calculations.

"Out of Mr. Warring's books," snapped the agent, who was educated as an auditor. "Where else would I get them?"

Whelan and William B. O'Connell are counsel for Emmitt Warring, 34, called "the brains" of the numbers gang. Former District Attorney Rover defends Emmitt's brothers, Leo Paul and Charles (Rags). Accused of conspiring with the trio is Gordon L. R. Sadur, an income tax expert. His lawyer is Irvin A. Goldstein, former assistant district attorney.

Leese and Swain testified that a numbers racket "expense" of $250 a week for bribing policemen was concealed in the racket accounts in the column which showed "losses"

Franco Planes Bomb Figueras; 500 Killed

Loyalists Deserting New Capital; French Consulate Struck

By the Associated Press.

Perpignan, France, Feb. 3.—Five hundred persons were reported killed or injured tonight in an insurgent bombardment of the refugee-crowded Spanish loyalist town of Figueras, 14 miles south of the French frontier.

The insurgent planes flew north to the border after the raid and were fired upon by French anti-aircraft batteries, but none was shot down.

[The Spanish loyalist government tonight began removal of its ministries from the town of Figueras to a secret refuge along the French border, the United Press said. It was the third flight of Premier Negrin's government in 11 days. The first was from Barcelona to Gerona and the second from Gerona to Figueras to escape from Gen. Franco's swift conquest of Catalonia.—Editor's note.]

Foreign relief officials and others crossing the frontier tonight said eight insurgent planes swept over Figueras, provisional government capital, six times, dropping more than 100 bombs. They estimated casualties as at least 500.

Consulate Bombed

The streets were jammed with men and women fleeing the insurgent drive northward which was reported to have reached within nine miles of Gerona, important highway point about 22 miles south of Figueras.

Gen. Bruno Jalander, of Finland, head of a League of Nations commission for the evacuation of foreign volunteers from Spain, described the bombardment as "one of the worst I have been through." He had spent several weeks at Barcelona before it fell.

The French consulate was said to have been virtually demolished by a direct hit. It could not be learned whether the building was occupied.

Insurgents said Franco's advance guards had driven beyond Santa Coloma de Farnes and Llagostera, which are about 11 miles southwest and southeast of Gerona. A loyalist army of 200,000 men was said to have been pushed steadily back.

Drive Temporarily Halted

Franco's commanderss said the drive had been halted temporarily at those points because the vanguards were advancing so swiftly they were in danger of losing contact with the main body of their troops.

The insurgent spearheads were drawn up at four places outside Gerona on the rim of the loyalist's receding territory. Flanking the Santa Coloma de Farnes and Llgostera columns was another at Tossa de Mar, on the coast, and a fourth inland north of Vich.

The coastal column was attempting to cut the road from the Port of San Feliu de Gixols inland to Gerona and the westernmost line was on the main Barcelona-Gerona highway.

Refugees Fleeing

At the extreme of the 120-mile line reaching from the Mediterranean to western Catalonia the loyalists completed the removal of the civilian population of Seo de Urgell, an important center only 5 miles south of the Spain-Andorra border.

Insurgents were pressing on Seo de Urgell from the village of Arfa, 4 miles to the south.

Thousands of Loyalist Spain's hungry refugees trudged north toward the French frontier in new waves. Travelers from Spain said the roads were clogged again as they were just after the fall of Barcelona.

The refugee flood has abated at least temporarily at the French frontier, however. French authorities said 61,158 noncombatants who had fled into France from Spain already had been removed to the interior and more would follow to make room for expected additional thousands in flight from the advancing insurgents.

Hearing Date Set

By the Associated Press.

A Justice Department official said yesterday a hearing would be held March 24 on the Government's motion to dismiss four suits brought by the Bank of Spain contesting ownership of about $10,000,000 worth of silver bought by the United States from the Spanish government last spring and summer.

The Bank of Spain contended in the suits that the $10,000,000 of silver bought by the United States Government from the Spanish government did not belong to the latter and therefore, the United States has no title to it.

Roosevelt Calls Story He Said U. S. Frontier Is on Rhine or in France 'A Deliberate Lie'

Defense

ment," said Lee. "I have absolutely no comment to make."

Berlin dispatches said news of the President's interview would be telephoned to Chancellor Hitler in his Munich retreat, and that Nazi officials were cautious in comment. According to the Associated Press, one German foreign ministry spokesman asked him "Why did this (Roosevelt's) statement come so late? Why was the world kept on tenterhooks for two days?"

Meanwhile, United States Ambassador William Phillips in Rome wrote Italian Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano for an explanation of personal attacks on President Roosevelt appearing in the Italian Fascist press. At the State Department, it was said the action was taken on Phillips' own initiative, without instructions.

Duce May Answer

The Gazetta Di Popolo of Turin described Mr. Roosevelt as "public enemy to peace No. 1," while Virginio Gayda, whose Giornalle D'Italia is regarded as a mouthpiece of Mussolini, made a scathing personal attack on the President.

Phillips was said to expect Ciano to answer the note, probably after consultation with Mussolini.

Mussolini may consult with the Fascist grand council at its meeting Saturday regarding President Roosevelt's policy of aiding the European democracies to rearm and prepare for "threats" of the totalitarian powers.

The President's measured condemnation of some members of the House and Senate and some newspaper owners who he said have been deliberately stating and printing misrepresentations of fact, failed to end the controversy over details of Tuesday's conference with Senate committee members.

But open comment was restrained. While the President said the question of secrecy at the conference was pure bunk, Senator Nye, chief critic of Administration foreign policy, said "I may say I count myself definitely sworn to secrecy concerning what happened at the White House conference."

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, another member of the committee, said he was in England when Prime Minister Baldwin referred to the Rhine as England's frontier, and he believed that somebody reporting the conference "indulged in an imaginative flight on the Baldwin statement."

Another member of the committee said a stenographic transcript of the conference was made and intimated it might be made public by the President if an extended dispute develops.

Answers Question

President Roosevelt's gravely serious rebuke to those he said had deliberately misrepresented his views came in response to a newspaper question on whether he would restate his foreign policy in simple language, as some people had apparently had difficulty in understanding it.

He said his policy had been thoroughly covered in messages to Congress, there was nothing new about it, and a number of people had deliberately misrepresented the facts. He said that obviously this country's foreign policy should not be involved in legislative, party, or newspaper policy. And he said he did not think the 1940 Presidential campaign should enter into the province of foreign policy or American defense in 1939.

Smiling ironically, he said all one has to do is to read newspaper stories and headlines to realize that pure guesses are dressed up and printed as statements of fact. He declared he had before him eight of ten newspapers, and that there was not one story or headline relating to foreign policy in these papers that did not give an erroneous statement of facts.

Authorizes Quotation

Then the President authorized reporters to quote him on the four points of foreign policy, which he called very very simple and which he said had nothing new in them.

The President said the American people were not fooled by those he called legislative and newspaper agitators, but were beginning to realize that this sort of thing is pure bunk. He said such agitators were appealing to the fears of the American people and were acting in a very un-American way. He said quite a number of them are receiving the loud acclaim of governments who do not believe in the continued independence of all nations.

It was at this point a reporter asked about Tuesday's conference with the Senate Military Affairs Committee and Thursday's conference with the War Department subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee. He said he could not very well comment on the conferences without first asking members of the committees what they thought.

But so far as secrecy was concerned, he said that also was pure bunk. Suppose, he said, the intelligence service reported to him on certain things going on in a certain country.

Question of Probability

There was no way of proving these things to a court, he said, though they appear to be reasonably true. By giving this information out for publication, when this Government is not definitely sure it is true, he said, he would completely terminate all possibility of getting future information. Such information that the Government believes to be true is merely its best slant on a situation.

The President declared this was the only element of secrecy that entered into either of the conferences. He said the other matters brought up at the conferences consisted solely of what he was relating at the press conference.

It was here a reporter asked about published statements that he regarded the Rhine as the frontier of the United States.

"That is a deliberate lie," he said. "You can quote that."

A correspondent asked if he had studied the newspaper articles complained of sufficiently to ascertain the possible motive of eight or ten newspapers in publishing the same statements regarding this country's foreign policy.

President Roosevelt replied that editorial writers often put down as fact what reporters state in a qualified manner. That was what happened in this case he said, declaring there was not one editorial writer who did not accept these qualified statements as facts.

Wishes Report Traced

The same correspondent asked if the President intended to imply there was anything sinister about the fact that published articles on Tuesday's conference were applauded abroad.

Mr. Roosevelt said that for the statement that the American frontier was the Rhine, and similar statements, he did not blame the newspapers. Some boob got that off, he said, not a newspaperman. He said he was not implying there was anything sinister about it.

Both the applause (in France and London) and the attacks (in Germany and Italy) he said were based on a pure misstatement of fact.

President Roosevelt said he would like to have this statement traced down; that he would like to have the man who attributed this statement to him brought to the White House; that he would like to confront him. One reporter remarked he would be glad to get the man who said it and bring him to the White House.

The President was asked if a member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee had made the controverted statement at Tuesday's conference. The President replied that no one had.

Queried about Senator Pittman's presence at the press conference, Mr. Roosevelt laughingly remarked that Senator Pittman had been invited to remain and report what transpired to the Senate. A few hours after his return to the Senate Pittman released a two-page statement calling the press conference "probably the most important ever held" and saying it "should definitely end insinuations that the President will engage in any entangling alliance with foreign governments.

The Senate Foreign Relations chairman said the President has "the sympathies of every patriotic American citizen when he says: 'We are sympathetic with the peaceful maintenance of political, economic, and social independence of all nations of the world.'" Pittman declared this "applies equally to the so-called totalitarian governments as well as to the so-called democratic governments."

For Balance of Power

"Some speakers and writers," said the Senator, "actuated by vanity, political expediency, or other ulterior motives, may attempt to convince our citizens that the President has changed his policy. Such a charge would not be true, and the American people will not be deceived by it."

As for contemplated plane sales to France, Pittman pointed out there is no law against any foreign government not at war purchasing anything, including airplanes, from private industry in the United States, and there is no law against representatives of foreign governments inspecting the plants or planes of private manufacturers. Such inspection he said has done the United States no harm.

Pittman said the only thing in his opinion that could prevent war in Europe and its possible future extension to the United States "would be such an equal balancing of military power that neither side to a controversy would be willing to undertake the chance of defeat."

Senator Logan said he favored "supplying France and England with ammunition and everything but manpower."

Earlier yesterday, the Senate Military Affairs Committee met to consider the issue of secret proceedings raised in four pending motions, and adjourned without acting on any of them. Chairman Sheppard said they agreed temporarily to postpone a vote on the issue.

The pending motions are:

By Senator Austin (Republican), Vermont—To publish the record of hearings already held and held in the future, but provide against discussion in open session of foreign policy, neutrality and national defense secrets.

By Senator Logan—To continue hearings in closed session and observe rules of secrecy.

By Senator Clark (Democrat), Missouri—To make public all testimony on sale of airplanes to foreign governments.

Senator Holman (Republican), Oregon—To hold public hearings except on expert military testimony "which it would be indiscreet to divulge."

May for Slow Expansion

Other developments of the defense program:

Chairman May, of the House Military Affairs Committee, announced his group will meet Monday morning and remain continuously in session until action is completed on the War Department's defense bill. May said he personally favored spreading manufacture of additional planes to the new 6,000 limit over a longer period than 18 months. He said industry should be geared to the point it can produce more planes in an emergency, while less are in service in peacetime.

The House Naval Affairs Committee, headed by Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, was preparing to head South next Thursday to inspect the site of the proposed Navy base at Jacksonville, Fla., and other sites not recommended by the Navy—at Miami, Fla.; Brunswick, Ga., and Charleston, S. C. The committee will take testimony from peace organizations on the Navy base program on Tuesday.

U. S. Testing 8 Planes Better Than Paris Gets

2 Other Curtiss Ships Superior to the One Which Dived 575 M.P.H.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 3.—While official Washington debates the sale of American war equipment to France, the United States Army is testing new and secret planes which, the policy of the armed services would indicate, are far superior to anything ticketed for export.

No less than eight war planes are at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, the Army Air Corps' laboratory, undergoing tests prior to letting of contracts for additional equipment.

It is the practice of the Army and Navy to forbid export of war materials unless research has provided them with something superior.

Speed But One Factor

At least two other types of Curtiss pursuit planes are reported to have performances superior to the export machine which, on January 22, achieved 575 miles an hour in a "terminal velocity" dive at Buffalo, N. Y.

The dive, an unofficial record for man-made speed, proved little about the actual performance of the plane except that it had the stamina to withstand terrific speeds, and that it would be valuable in combat work requiring dives at normal engine revolutions.

The Air Corps rates maneuverability, "ceiling" and range, with speed in listing specifications for new planes.

A new fighting plane of unique design produced by the Bell Aircraft Co., of Buffalo, which will be tested at Wright Field, was built to certain standards of performance of which speed is only one factor.

U. S. Insists on Safety

American aircraft designers say it is unfair to compare our war planes with Europe's on the basis of speed alone, but add that this country can equal or top the performances of the super-speed pursuit planes built abroad.

European pursuits are built to carry an engine, machine guns and a pilot, squeezed into cramped quarters dictated by highly streamlined designs. American pursuits, by comparison, incorporate safety features for the pilot, full radio equipment and instrument flying aids for long-range work.

The new planes at Wright Field, though reportedly superior to current Army equipment, are a compromise between maximum speed, maximum safety and designs peculiarly fitted to the needs of our continental area and geographical position.

U.S. Completes Evidence In Curtiss-Wright Trial

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—The Government rested its case today against three Curtiss-Wright corporations and three individuals charged with conspiracy to violate the 1934 neutrality act by attempting to deliver four bombing planes to Bolivia, then at war with Paraguay.

Denying dismissal motions, Federal Judge Leibell ordered the defense to open its case Monday.

with relentless outspokenness and it seems, also, that the London and Paris government chiefs were no more delighted with the American President's war cry than were the bloodthirsty opposition. . . .

"He disproved nothing. He merely retreated. He was unable to change an existing fact.

"Because, even if he did not use the expression 'the American frontier is the Rhine' we know well that his policy rests on incitement to French and English territory as his war-base to which to deliver airplanes and other war materials."

London Says Nazis Win

London, Feb. 3 (AP).—President Roosevelt's statement expressing opposition to "entangling alliances" today was described in London diplomatic circles as "a victory for the Republicans, for Germany and for Italy."

"Obviously it is an injustice to President Roosevelt to indicate he had taken definite commitments with Britain and France," one diplomat said.

"His outspoken sympathy for democracies is enough at present to war and Mr. Roosevelt regards put a brake on the aggressive policies of Germany and Italy."

U. S. Export Gains Found to Exceed Nazis'

Latin America Trade Cited by Expert; Britain Also Sells More

By the Associated Press.

Henry Chalmers, veteran Commerce Department trade expert, said yesterday that Germany's efforts to extend its trade by barter agreements were meeting with increasing difficulties, particularly in Latin America.

In a review of last year's world trade, Chalmers noted that Germany's export sales have not increased in recent years so fast as those of the United States and Great Britain. He added:

"According to official trade records, the recovery in the value of total German exports to all countries from the depth of the depression is still not as close to predepression level as the export trade of both the other major industrial countries and suggests that on the whole only relatively moderate results have thus far attended these exceptional German methods."

Chalmers said that even in such Latin-American countries as Brazil, Chile, Peru, Ecuador and Mexico, where German sales have increased in recent years, the gains have been made at the expense of countries other than the United States. He added that Germany had made "no significant" gain in the "important markets of Argentina, Uruguay and Cuba."

Germany's chief gains, he said, have been in southeastern Europe and these have been largely offset by losses in northern and western Europe.

About a dozen countries put restrictions on trade in wheat and other grains and feeds, the Scandinavian and other countries known as the "Oslo powers" dropped their tariff-reducing program. The Netherlands embarked on protective tariffs, and tariff increases were instituted by France, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, The Netherlands, Switzerland, Italy, Yugoslavia, and Greece.

War conditions hampered trade both with China and Japan, and technical exchange restrictions were tightened by Ecuador, Argentina and Uruguay.

Tariffs were reduced by Mexico, Venezuela, Uruguay, Finland and Turkey.

C.I.O. Withdraws Walsh's Bid to Address It

LUDLOW

The resolution would require a public mandate before the United States could engage in a foreign war. Ludlow emphasized the measure was "still alive" and "I haven't dropped it by any means."

The Representative said he would sound out sentiment of colleagues before taking any further action to bring his resolution to the floor.

Mesa Verde National Park, Colo., Feb. 3 (AP).—It may not be significant, but an axe is to be the emlem of authority in the Appropriations Committee of the National House of Representatives hereafter.

A bill to set up legal requirements respecting the display and use of the American flag has been introduced by Senator Caraway (Democrat), Arkansas, in behalf of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

House Extends Dies Inquiry By 10-1 Vote

$100,000 Appropriation For Another Year to Be Granted Next Week

The Dies committee to investigate un-American activities was given another year's lease of life yesterday in a resolution passed by 10-to-1 vote of the House following brief but turbulent debate.

With only 34 Democrats and one American Laborite casting negative ballots, 344 members—including 187 Democrats, 155 Republicans and 2 Progressives—indorsed continuance of the committee to January 3, 1940. It is understood a $100,000 appropriation for its work will be approved next week.

Representative Dies (Democrat), of Texas, around whose investigation controversy has raged almost since its inception last summer, told The Post yesterday he would call his committee together immediately after funds are voted.

Dies Shouts at "Abuse"

As he strode to the front of the chamber at close of an hour's rapid-fire debate, Dies was greeted with loud applause, in which a few boos could be distinguished. Plunging into an impassioned defense of his committee, he shouted that "the campaign of abuse and misrepresentation is no new thing."

The burly, blond East Texan flayed the air with his fists as he roared at his opponents that the committee had "spent a large part of its funds" investigating the Nazis.

Addressing his remarks directly to a little group of militant liberals sitting side by side—Representatives Voorhis (Democrat), of California; Coffee (Democrat), of Washington; Marcantonio (American Labor), of New York, and, nearby, Keller (Democrat), of Illinois—Dies bellowed:

"What is it that you have to fear? The Democratic Administration is not in sympathy with communism. True liberals have nothing to fear from an honest investigation—they are not Communists."

In debate severely restricted because of an iron-bound time limitation, members angrily threw in their darts for and against continuation of the committee.

While Dies held his head in his hand, Representative Taylor (Republican), of Tennessee, observed that "I think Martin Dies would make a better President than some I've seen since I came to Washington 20 years ago—and I don't have in mind Herbert Hoover when I say that." Republicans applauded.

"Less Sensationalism" Urged

Another Republican, Representative Fish, of New York, quoted from Alexander Pope in describing the Administration's attitude toward the Dies committee, "Without sneering, teach the rest to sneer."

Characterizing David Lasser, head of the Workers Alliance, as one of the most notorious Communists in the United States," and the alliance itself as "a purely 100 per cent Communist organization," Fish shouted, "there's more to fear from our enemies within than from our enemies without."

Representative Healey (Democrat), of Massachusetts, a member of the committee, said he hoped there would be "less sensationalism" in this year's investigation, while Representative O'Connor (Democrat), of Montana, urged that "the committee can do a great deal of good if it inquires into the cause of communism."

Navy to Bid Against Army For Fliers

Fearing Competition, Drafts Plan Offering Full Commissions

Foreseeing a shortage of high caliber naval pilots when the Army air expansion program gets under way, the Navy is contemplating establishment of a "Flight Officers Corps" to provide for its own aviation needs.

Legislation is being drafted at the Navy Department to permit the commissioning of graduates of the Navy Flying School at Pensacola, Fla., as "flight ensigns" to serve with the fleet and pilot the many patrol planes to be stationed at the Alaskan and the mid-Pacific air bases proposed in the program now before Congress.

Permanent Appointments

Under the plan, pilots would be given permanent appointments but would serve only until they were 40 to 45 years of age when they would be either retired or discharged with a bonus payment. They would be promoted after periods of service up to the rank of "flight lieutenant commander."

Details of the plan have not been worked out as yet and it has not been approved by the department. The general plan was suggested to the House Naval Affairs Committee by Rear Admiral Arthur B. Cook, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics. The committee directed the Navy Department to prepare a bill for its consideration.

Admiral Cook told the committee that under the War Department program, between 1,000 and 2,000 pilots are to be commissioned permanently in the Army from civil life. The Navy at present gets its pilots partly from the Naval Academy and partly from civil life. The latter, however, are not commissioned in the Navy, but after qualifying at Pensacola are given three years active duty as aviation cadets. They are then returned to civil life and commissioned in the Naval Reserve.

Fear Army Competition

The Navy, Admiral Cook said, fears it will have difficulty in securing the best pilot material with the Army offering candidates a permanent career, and also that the military service may drain it of its best reserve officers by giving them permanent commissions in the Air Corps when they complete their service as aviation cadets.

Officials said the Navy would need about 1,200 flight officers when authorized plane strength of 3,000 is attained.

Meanwhile, to take care of the immediate need for additional pilots, the Navy Department is proposing that 140 aviation cadets be retained on active duty as ensigns in the Naval Reserve.

Movie Firms Agree To Curb Expansion During Trust Suit

Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust cases, yesterday announced the Justice Department had entered into an agreement with the major motion picture companies intended to maintain the status quo in theater ownership by the companies pending settlement of an anti-trust suit against them.

The agreement was a development in the department's suit against the eight major producing and distributing companies to force them out of the business of exhibiting pictures on the ground that they have a virtual monopoly of the industry.

The department has agreed to refrain from seeking a temporary injunction to prevent the companies from expanding their control of theaters until the suit is settled. The companies, on their part, agree to report to the department any plans to acquire new theaters.

Sen. King Favors Capitol St. Site For Auditorium

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, said yesterday that he favored the East Capitol street site for a proposed Washington auditorium over "the congested site suggested on Constitution avenue."

"I am in favor of an auditorium, but think it should be a building to serve local needs and not a structure designed for inauguration crowds," said King.

Both sites have been approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, has introduced a bill for a $9,000,000 Federal auditorium on Constitution avenue. The proposed East Capitol street building would be a sports center primarily, and the National Guard Armory for the District, and would seat 20,000.

Washington Gas Again Seeks to Buy 2 Utilities

In a petition filed with the Public Utilities Commission yesterday, the company has requested authorization to acquire the capital stock and other securities of the Washington Suburban Co. and Alexandria Gas Co.

An aggregate purchase price of $1,250,000, payable in 12,255 shares of the company's $4.50 cumulative convertible preferred stock, was offered.

Federal Deficit Passed 2 Billion Mark Feb. 1

The Treasury disclosed yesterday that the Federal deficit passed the $2,000,000,000 mark February 1, as the national debt mounted to a new all-time high of $39,684,970,614.

The deficit, which made one jump of $50,000,000 because of a transfer of that sum to the social security old age reserve account, was $2,046,085,465 on February 1, compared with $801,908,718 for the corresponding day last year.

Railroad RFC To Cut Funded Debt Proposed

House Committee Hears Suggestion for Loans on Below Par Bonds

By the Associated Press.

The House Interstate Commerce Committee received a proposal yesterday for creation of a Railroad Reconstruction Finance Corporation to assist railroads in reducing their funded debt.

Chairman Lea (Democrat), California, placed the proposal in the record of hearings on his general transportation bill. He declines to tell committee members who drafted the proposal, or whether he would sponsor it, but gave this description of the program:

The new corporation would be controlled by the RFC and would issue 3½ per cent preferred stock with principal and interest guaranteed by the Government. The corporation would buy railroad bonds below par only, to be held as security for money the corporation would advance to the carriers.

A railroad would contract to redeem the bonds within ten years, paying, meanwhile, a service charge of 6 per cent. A carrier would buy back its own securities as rapidly as available.

Of the 6 per cent service charge, 3½ per cent would be applied to interest and 2½ per cent to amortization.

Lea said the plan would reduce fixed charges of needy railroads, would permit conversion of bonds into cash, if necessary, would facilitate the reorganization of roads in default, would make possible physical improvements, and would permit Government aid without loss.

He remarked, however, that railroad bonds might not be available below par and that well-financed roads not needing aid would be discriminated against because of assistance to weak competitors.

George B. Harrison, railway labor executive, told the committee he believed that if the railroads had realized earlier the ability of truck and motor carriers to carry traffic, a part of the current railroad problem would have been avoided. The railroads, he said, would have gotten into motor transportation themselves to a greater extent than they have.

Harrison also remarked that overdevelopment of the Nation's transportation facilities had created a "chaotic condition" which this Congress should consider.

D. C. Firm Fights Penalty Imposed On Business Tax

The District's power to impose a delinquent tax penalty on a business privilege levy without first deducting payments on tangible personal property tax was attacked yesterday by the Highway Engineering & Construction Co.

Under the law, operators who pay both the business privilege tax and the tangible personal property tax can deduct the latter tax from the former.

The company maintains that while it filed a late return on the privilege tax and therefore was subject to the legal penalties, it also paid a personal property tax. Therefore the company contends that in making out the total bill the District should first deduct the personal property tax from the business tax and then add the penalties. They ask a refund of $276.24.

$1 Wage Boost Ends Elevator Strike

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—The three-day strike of elevator operators and other building service employes in the heart of the garment area—center of New York's largest industry—ended tonight when the workers voted to accept Mayor LaGuardia's compromise for a $1 weekly wage increase and reduction in the work-week from 48 to 47 hours.

The workers were ordered to return to work immediately and service in several hundred buildings affected was expected to be normal in the morning.

Roosevelt Says He'll Stand By Amlie, Roberts

Promises Interesting Letter if Virginian Is Rejected as Judge

President Roosevelt served notice on the Senate at his press conference yesterday that he would not budge from his selection of Floyd H. Roberts for Federal judge in the Western Virginia Judicial District or of former Representative Thomas R. Amlie, Wisconsin Progressive, for membership on the Interstate Commerce Commission.

If the Senate rejects the Roberts nomination, the President volunteered, he will write Roberts a letter which will be very interesting.

Hearings on Amlie Monday

A Senate Interstate Commerce sub-committee, headed by Senator Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, will start hearings Monday on the Amlie appointment. Selection of Amlie, an advocate of Government ownership of railroads and other industries, for a Republican vacancy on the I. C. C., has provoked widespread criticism.

It was reported, meanwhile, that Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, would try to persuade the President to withdraw the appointment. Senators' predictions as to the number of votes against Roberts ranged from 75 to 83.

Smith Still a Question

Whether the President will withdraw the nomination of Donald Wakefield Smith, reappointed during the Congressional recess to the National Labor Relations Board, was still a question. Smith is bitterly opposed by the American Federation of Labor.

Glass refused to comment on the President's stand on Roberts' nomination except to say the President had a right to write letters to anyone any time he chooses.

$8,000 Drug Store Fire Endangers 15 Central Pupils

A two-alarm fire starting under the floor of a drug store at Fourteenth and Clifton streets northwest, yesterday endangered the lives of 15 Central High School pupils who were lunching there.

Firemen said the blaze originated from the sparks of a welding torch, which ignited scraps of paper and cinders accumulated beneath the floor.

To get to the blaze firemen had to smash through 10 inches of concrete. The welder had entered the pit beneath the store by a trap door located next door.

Firemen fought the fire for more than an hour before getting it under control.

Dr. Marcus Smith, owner of the store, estimated the damage at $8,000.

Va. Captain Kills Girl, Self In Their Office

Shoots Stenographer At Desk Next to His; Held Murder, Suicide

By the Associated Press.

Roanoke, Va., Feb. 3.—Edith Robertson, 29-year-old stenographer, was slain and Capt. H. D. Hawley, commander of Battery H, 264th Coast Artillery, a National Guard organization at Vinton, Va., died by his own hand today in a downtown office before startled employes.

Dr. Charles M. Irvin, Roanoke city coroner, said it was a plain case of murder and suicide, but could ascribe no motive.

Employes in the office where Miss Robertson and Hawley were employed at adjoining desks said the shooting occurred so quickly they saw only the second phase of it. W. E. Cunningham, an accountant, said he heard a shot and looked up to see Hawley, standing erect, shoot himself and slump over.

The first shot sounded like the explosion of a firecracker to D. Bunting, another employe, and he looked up to see Capt. Mawley shoot himself.

Hawley had been with the company, an electric refrigerator concern, since 1926, first as division manager and more recently as special contact man working with ice cream manufacturers, it was said. He is survived by his wife and two children.

Miss Robertson had been with the company three years.

Hillsville, Pa., Feb. 3 (AP).—A dark-haired 22-year-old maid, District Attorney John G. Lamoree said, shot and killed today the man she claimed had promised to marry her and then spurned her because his father "thought I wasn't good enough."

Lamoree said the woman, Angeline Maravello, fired four bullets into Michael Rich, jr., in the Rich home, then calmly walked to the home of a constable and gave her self up.

Lamoree quoted Miss Maravello as saying:

"I loved Mike with all my heart. It was his father's fault. I was good enough to scrub and work for them; but no, I wasn't good enough for his son."

TVA Doctors Find Malaria by Test Of Blood Color

The United States Public Health Service yesterday announced the invention of a new and simple diagnostic test which discloses malaria when parasites cannot be found under the microscope. H. O. Proske, chief medical technician, and Dr. Robert B. Watson, both of the Tennessee Valley Authority, devised the method—a biochemical color test of the patient's blood corpuscles.

No equipment other than that found in any clinical laboratory is necessary. Equipment does not even have to be sterile, although it is essential that all glassware used be chemically clean.

The originators of the test, in a recent series of experiments, obtained 97.4 per cent positive reactions in known malaria cases, compared with 81.9 per cent yielded by microscopic examination.

$661.30 Seized In Numbers Raid Can't Be Found

More than $650 in cash seized in numbers raids was missing from the United States Marshal's office here when the Government began assembling its evidence against eight alleged lottery operators, the District Attorney's office revealed yesterday. The total missing was $661.30.

Other suspected shortages have been investigated.

Carroll Bailey, 34, and two persons accused with him of running a numbers game are scheduled to be tried in District Court shortly. They were among eight arrested in a raid January 29, last year, by vice squad officers under Sergt. George Deyoe. The others pleaded guilty.

Seized in the raid were slips, an adding machine and the missing cash. Assistant District Attorney Heflin revealed yesterday the evidence could not be found.

The Department of Justice recently investigated the system in the marshal's office here. A department official last night said the inquiry covered a number of alleged shortages but had not been audited.

The department has not decided whether the facts warrant prosecution, he said.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 3.—A confession that he murdered his wife and 4-year-old son here June 15, 1935, was made here today, District Attorney Park related, by Dr. Norman Stewart, 2d, 34, who returned voluntarily from Jacksonville, Fla., where he had married and lived during the interim by working as a bartender and odd-job man.

The district attorney said Stewart had been indicted after the deaths of his wife and son. He was committed to jail on the murder indictment and with the additional charge pending against him of stealing $300 from a hotel at Jacksonville to finance his trip here.

Stewart walked into the office of C. Dick Cable, attorney, yesterday and told his story. Cable turned him over to the district attorney.

For four hours today, arms folded and showing no emotion, Stewart detailed how, driven to desperation by debt, his mind "went blank" after an argument with his first wife over finances in their tiny flat above a garage in suburban Wilkinsburg.

When he came to his senses later, the statement added, Stewart found his wife, Mary, 29, of Wilkinsburg, and his son and namesake, Norman 3d, dead—beaten to death with a hammer and stabbed with a bread knife.

That was June 15, 1935 when, after having failed to make a success of a dental practice, Stewart held a job as a $15-a-week grocery clerk.

With $11 in his pocket, Park said the statement related, Stewart hitch-hiked to Jacksonville, where he was a bartender and odd-jobs man.

In Jacksonville he lived as Fred Lawson Flake and married Margaret Adams, of Moultrie, Ga., a hotel cashier.

For more than a year he evaded a hotel rule requiring employes to submit to fingerprinting. When hotel authorities insisted upon the fingerprinting he fled January 25, leaving his second wife behind.

"I came back to Pittsburgh because I wanted to get the whole thing off my mind," Park quoted Stewart as saying.

Police said they had believed Stewart, a graduate dentist of the University of Pittsburgh, was dead. They had given up the search for him several years ago.

The bodies were found three days later by Mrs. Stewart's brother, J. B. McClelland. The home was a shamble.

The Stewarts' was a campus romance. They met while students at the University of Pittsburgh and were married after graduation in 1926. Later Stewart inherited $40,000 from an aunt but this was wiped out by stock investments.

Stewart said he was a son of Mrs. Norman Stewart, sr., of Philadelphia.

Inside Numbers Racket Story Disclosed to Warring Jurors

which were paid to winning numbers bettors.

Leese said that when this was discovered it was pointed out to Sadur, who was trying to get the Warring income tax reports approved by the Treasury men. Leese said Sadur remarked that he would write in the bribes, $13,000 a year, if they had to be shown and that Sadur did so with a red pencil in Room 3112 of the Internal Revenue Department.

Sadur put the $13,000 in the "expense" column for 1935, Leese said, and beside it wrote "pro." Then he added $13,000 to the receipts so that the net income was not changed.

It was then pointed out, Leese said, that bribe money was not a lawful deduction. He said Sadur admitted he knew this all the time. The Government claims that writing these figures was an effort to mislead the Government agents and that what Sadur did ties him up with the conspiracy.

Leese said that later Sadur claimed he took his schedules to the agents with the $13,000 written in in red pencil and that Sadur brought his associate and brother-in-law, Henry L. Scherr, to swear that the red figures were written in Sadur's own office.

Goldstein made Leese describe in exact detail the scene when Sadur allegedly wrote the figures in the revenue office. Leese left the witness stand and he and the lawyer reenacted the scene in the middle of the courtroom, to show where everybody present was sitting.

District Attorney Pine, directing the prosecution, stopped Goldstein when he started to quiz Leese about some work papers of Sadur's. He insisted Goldstein put them into evidence first.

Pine questioned Swain, the next and ninth Government witness. Swain left the witness stand, and with the six lawyers huddled around him in front of the jury box, he gestured to columns in the racket ledgers.

"The first column," Swain explained, shows the gross amount bet by the public (nearly $2,0000,000 in 1935). The next column shows the money the Warrings actually received, after 30 per cent had gone for commission. The next column shows what the Warrings paid out in 'hits,' that is, to people whose numbers won. The fourth column shows the net loss for the day, where an entry was made if the 'hits' exceeded the net receipts. The fifth column shows the wins, if the receipts were greater than the hits."

Swain said he added up the hit columns for every week in the year and found that his totals were less than the Warrings' own totals by $250. This, he said, was the concealed $250 paid in bribes to policemen.

Slaying Hint Ignored at Weinberg Quiz

Inquiry Into Hines Aide's Death Accepts Suicide Verdict

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 3.—The official theory that George Weinberg, important State witness in the first policy racket trial of James J. Hines, died a suicide, went unchallenged today at a district attorney's departmental inquiry into the gangster's death.

As the hearing was being held, the reading of testimony given by Weinberg in the original trial of the veteran Tammany district leader continued in General Sessions Court, where Hines stands accused of having sold political protection to the Dutch Schultz numbers syndicate.

Suicide Verdict Scouted

Weinberg was found with a bullet in his head last Sunday in an isolated Westchester County house where he and other key witnesses were guarded by detectives on the staff of District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey. Two days later, after an official suicide verdict had been given, George Mulry, a Mineola lawyer, asked Gov. Lehman to order an investigation.

Mulry said the lack of fingerprints on the pistol supposed to have been used by Weinberg merited attention and declared also the gangster's hands were unmarked by the fine powder spray frequently present on the hands of a person who has recently discharged a revolver.

Blonde at Hideaway

Dewey asked the inquiry specifically to determine whether Detective Joe Kaitz, whose pistol was used in the Weinberg death, had been negligent. A decision on that point was deferred.

It was further revealed today that a blonde woman had been present at the hideaway.

Dewey said the blonde was Mrs. Evelyn Supnick, a sister of J. Richard (Dixie) Davis, another prosecution witness, and that she was employed in the house as a cook merely because no "outsider" was wanted.

New Book Finished By James Joyce

Paris, Feb. 3 (AP).—The Irish author, James Joyce, after laboring 16 years has finally brought forth a new book called "Finnegan's Wake," the first since his "Ulysses," which caused a literary sensation in 1922.

It deals with life in Joyce's native city, Dublin, and will be published in the spring by Viking Press of New York.

Murphy to Set Man to Check On U.S. Judges

Admits Act Prompted By Manton Case but Reassures Judiciary

Decision to appoint some outstanding member of the bar as a special assistant to conduct investigations of any "unhealthy conditions and irregularities" which may be found to exist in the Federal judiciary was announced yesterday by Attorney General Frank Murphy.

The announcement was a sequel to recent resignation of Martin T. Manton, of New York, from the United States Circuit Court of appeals for the second judicial district, whose conduct now is under investigation.

"Notwithstanding the disturbing character of the charges that have been filed against Judge Manton," the Attornel General said, he had confidence in the general integrity of the Federal Judiciary. He expressed determination, however, "To take prompt and vigorous measures wherever there is cause to believe that unhealthy conditions and irregularities exist, in order that public confidence in the administration of Federal justice shall not be impaired."

"To this end he has ordered an investigation of any conditions that appear to warrant inquiry," the announcement said.

The special assistant will act directly under the Attorney General himself and have complete charge of such cases.

The Attorney General also announced establishment of a separate unit in the criminal division of the Department of Justice to be known as the civil liberties unit.

The order, which was suggested by the so-called La Follette Civil Liberties Committee of the Senate, said the unit's functions would be "to make a study of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States and acts of Congress relating to civil rights with reference to present conditions, to make appropriate recommendations in respect thereto, and to direct, supervise and conduct prosecutions of violations of the provisions of the Constitution or acts of Congress guaranteeing civil rights to individuals."

Bridges Demands U. S. Make Public Note to Mexico

By the United Press.

Senator Bridges (Republican), New Hampshire, yesterday demanded that the State Department make public a "very secret and mysterious" note which was reported dispatched to the Mexican government at the time it expropriated American and other foreign-owned oil properties.

In a letter to Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, Bridges charged that general confiscation of the properties, if tacitly approved by inaction on the part of this Government, "may soon endanger the peace and welfare of this Nation, and may well result in international disorder."

"'Is the government of President Cardenas, obviously hostile to the United States, drifting toward or already under the domination of European or Asiatic powers?' Bridges asked.

The note to which Bridges referred had been described as so forcefully worded as to endanger this Nation's relations with Mexico.

Townsend Harms Pension Cause, Committee Told

By the Associated Press.

Arthur L. Johnson, who drafted both the general welfare and Townsend pension bills, told the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday the Townsendites were using "pure fraud" and that the name of Dr. F. E. Townsend was a "handicap" to the old-age pension movement.

"I left the Townsend organization," he said, "because of Dr. Townsend's statement that he was going to hold out $200 a month as a wisp of straw on the end of a stick for the cow to follow and never reach."

Johnson was testifying at hearings on social security act amendments. He recommended the general welfare idea which contemplates pensions of $30 to $60 a month for all individuals over 60, financed by a 2 per cent gross income tax.

Halifax Invites Hitler to Join In Disarming

Couples Suggestion With Warning on Britain's Strength

By the Associated Press.

Hull, England, Feb. 3.—Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax tonight coupled a disarmament suggestion to Adolf Hitler with a warning Britain swiftly is "resuming its ancient strength" and that Britons would "unite as one man" in event of war.

Recalling Hitler's Reichstag speech Monday night in which the Reichsfuehrer said "Germany must export or die," Halifax declared in a speech here:

World "Armed Camp"

"It is not my business to discuss the extent to which the difficulties of Germany or of any other country might be reduced by action that is within the power of a single country to take.

"But I know that so long as the world remains an armed camp, the present difficulties will, in a greater or less degree, persist for all."

The foreign secretary re-emphasized the promise he said Premier Mussolini made to him and to Prime Minister Chamberlain during their Rome visit January 11 to 14 that Italian troops would be withdrawn from Spain at the end of the civil war.

Roosevelt Praised

He said Il Duce pledged respect for the "existing status quo" in the Mediterranean and desired no Spanish territorial awards for Italy's participation in the civil war.

Halifax praised President Roosevelt's "striking expressions" of the American ideals of independence and freedom in his Congressional message of January 4 which Halifax described as "the voice of a people which owes its independent existence as a nation to its love of liberty."

Gaumnitz Named Chief Of U. S. Market Division

By the Associated Press.

Edwin W. Gaumnitz has been named director of the Agriculture Department's Division of Marketing and Marketing Agreements, succeeding F. R. Wilcox, who resigned last week.

Philip F. Maguire was also named yesterday vice president of the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, a post Wilcox also held.

Drown

Cedar Creek would flow over the Shenandoah County approach to the bridge of U. S. Route 11.

J. A. Cannon, 18, was drowned near Washington, N. C., when he fell from a boat at the height of a gale. An aged man was found fatally frozen near Paragould, Ark., as the State suffered its worst snowstorm in 20 years.

Tornadoes, heavy snows, low temperatures and floods of tributary streams caused widespread damage and suffering in the South.

Highways Under Water

Streams had forced farmers from lowlands in areas of Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee and Kentucky. Many highways were under water, and several towns had been damaged by overflowing streams.

Tornadoes hit in Columbia, S. C., 20 miles west of LaGrange, Ga., on the Alabama line, and 10 miles northwest of Philadelphia, Miss.

A twister cut a swath 60 yards wide through three colored blocks in South Columbia. A score of shacks were leveled, 12 men suffered injuries. The small tornado near LaGrange demolished three farm homes and damaged three others.

Main Street Flooded

A wall of water five feet high swept down the main street of Middleboro, Ky., when the Yellow Creek surged from its banks. Twenty business and residential blocks were flooded. Damage was estimated at $40,000.

Twenty-two students and a teacher were marooned for three hours on a school bus near Briceville, Tenn., when waters covered the highway.

The rain which continued through the night, was to end here today, with the official forecast "cloudy and colder" today, accompanied by moderate to fresh winds. It will be fair tomorrow. Yesterday's high was 44, with the mercury falling to 28 in the night.

At Norfolk and Richmond, Va., southerly winds fanned the mercury into the 70's, marking a new high for February 3 in both cities. A cold wave followed the wake of the storm, however, and at Norfolk a minimum of 34 was due by this morning. Temperature was also freakishly high in Raleigh and Roanoke.

90 Graduated From Jefferson Junior High

Mrs. Doyle Presents Diplomas at Exercises At Stuart School

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education, presented diplomas to more than 90 students of Jefferson Junior High School last night at exercises in the auditorium of Stuart Junior High School.

After a prayer and a reading by Charles Norfolk, vice president of the graduating class, Mildred Stolar, class president, delivered an address of welcome. The class poem was read by Theodore Schatz.

Joint Study Asked Of D. C. Merger Bill

Joint committee hearings on the Griffenhagan plan for reorganizing the District government appeared likely last night, following completion of the report yesterday and its submission to Congressional leaders.

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, following a conference with Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, who heads the House sub-committee in charge of the reorganization plan, said the joint hearing might save time for both Congress and the public.

He will appoint a sub-committee to meet with the Kennedy group, if the House wishes, he said.

Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church tomorrow at 11 a. m. will celebrate the seventh anniversary of the dedication of its new sanctuary.

Dr. J. N. M. Gray, chancellor of American University, is to speak.

Mrs. Montgomery, the organist, will repeat two solos, prelude and postlude, that she used at the dedication service February 7, 1932. Robert F. Freund, minister of music, will sing and direct the choir in the anthem, "Fierce Was the Wild Billow." The Rev. W. A. Keese, minister, will address the Susanna Wesley class at 10 a. m.

Foundry. Dr. Jacob S. Payton, editor of the National Methodist Press, will speak at the morning service. In the evening Dr. Ralph Dela Smith, of Woodside Church, will be guest preacher.

Woodside. Dr. Smith, the minister, and Dr. Lucius Clark, former chancellor of American University, will both speak at the morning communion. At evening worship, the Rev. Paul Lehman will be guest preacher, speaking on "The Church in the Life and Thought of the Early Centuries."

Trinity. At the 11 a. m. service the Rev. Richard Gales will assist the minister, Dr. Dan L. Ennis, who at 8 p. m. will continue his sermon series on the "Working Tools of Life." His specific topic will be "The Knowledge of the Tools."

Chevy Chase. The Rev. John L. Mixon, director of social service in the Washington Federation of Churches, will speak at 11 a. m., while the Rev. E. G. Latch, minister, presides.

Calvary. The Rev. Orris G. Robinson, minister, will have as the subject of his evening sermon, "The Handicap of Failure and How to Forget It."

Petworth. "Childhood," the first in a series of morning "Sermons for the Family Circle," will be Dr. Frank Steelman's topic at 11 a. m. At the 8 p. m. hour, Dr. Steelman, by request, will continue his series on "Black Rock," by Ralph Connor.

McKendree. At morning worship, the Rev. Samuel E. Rose will discuss "Seeing the Father." His theme at the informal 8 p. m. song service will be "The Converted Churchman."

Eldbrooke. "Spiritual Exercise" is to be the subject of the Rev. Walter M. Michael's communion meditation at the 11 a. m. service. The Rev. John Grose will preach in the evening on "The Writer of the Book of Revelation."

Dumbarton Avenue. Holy Communion and reception of new members will be observed in the morning. Young people will have charge of the evening service, which will be on the theme "The Broken Law of Love." Those participating will be Edwin Summers, leader, Paul Berry, Dorothy Sholtz, Dorothy Campbell and Marjorie McDonough. The Rev. Walter F. Atkinson will preach on "The Power of Love."

Lincoln Road. Baptism, communion and reception of new members will be held at the morning service, as the Rev. Reginald H. Stone speaks on Col. 1:18, "That in all things He might have pre-eminence." "The Relation of Conduct to Character" will be the minister's evening subject.

150 Will Attend Refugee Session

More than 150 delegates from labor and social organizations are expected for the conference here Sunday and Monday of the Jewish Peoples committee studying a plan of asylum in the United States for Jewish refugees from Germany. Meetings will be at the Continental Hotel with a public session Sunday night at the National Press Club.

The committee will present to the president, the Vice President, Secretary Hull and members of Congress evidence supporting "the American principle of asylum."

Dr. Sachar to Talk At Jewish Forum

Dr. Abram L. Sachar, of the University of Illinois, tonight will address the National Jewish Forum at the Jewish Community Center on "Survivals That Speak," a discussion of the situation of the Jew in Europe and what can be done to alleviate conditions there. He is national director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations.

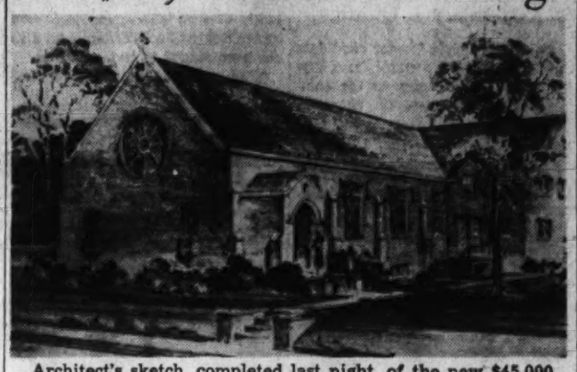
Church of the Week

Fountain Memorial to Build New $45,000 Church Building



Architect's sketch, completed last night, of the new $45,000 church and educational building of the Fountain Memorial Baptist Church, in Anacostia. Construction will start shortly

Sunday School Facilities Also Provided In Proposed Edifice, With Many Class Rooms and Spacious Fellowship Hall

The Fountain Memorial Baptist Church, Anacostia, shortly will start construction of a new $45,000 church and educational building, plans of which were completed last night. D. B. Johannes, jr., is architect, and Henry E. Trolle consulting architect.

To that end, February is being celebrated as "Building Month," with emphasis on various phases of the construction program, beginning with a communion service tomorrow morning, when the Rev. W. Bertram King, pastor, will discuss "The House of the Lord—It Can Be Built."

To face on Naylor road southeast, near Twenty-second and Q streets and Minnesota avenue, the brick edifice, of Gothic architecture, is necessitated by the rapid growth of the congregation.

The Sunday School, of which Marvin Walter is superintendent, and Herscel Snead, associate, will have eight classrooms on the second floor, which also will contain rooms intermediates and juniors and a balcony.

The first floor will contain, in addition to a church auditorium seating 300, with pulpit, baptismal and organ; the pastor's study; an office, and accommodations for beginners, adult and cradle roll divisions.

With a spacious fellowship hall, kitchen and several classrooms, the basement will be a center for social and religious activities of the Fountain Memorial group, particularly the young people, now being led by Melvin Snead, Meada Manes and Elizabeth Snead, of the B. Y. P. U's.

Especially looking forward to the new structure's completion is the building committee, consisting of the Rev. Mr. King; George Curtis, chairman; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Alexander; Holton Blakeslee, also teacher of the Adult Fountain Class, M. G. Fincham; Henry Elmore, Mrs. Gertrude Kolb, Mrs. Samuel Snyder, Marvin Walter and the pastor's wife.

Among groups and leaders who will sponsor programs in new quarters in a very few months are the Missionary Society, under Mrs. Henry Elmore; the choir, conducted by Mrs. William Redman, and Mrs. Elmore's class, of which Mrs. Edna Walters is president.

The board of trustees consists of George Curtis, Henry Snyder, M. G. Fincham, while Blakeslee and Clifford Rannings serve as deacons.

Also prominently identified with the congregation are Mrs. Holton Blakeslee, who was a member when the church was a mission back in the early 1900's, and members of the Girls' Quartette, consisting of Sarah Bunyea, Mildred Brewer, Eleanor Snead and Edna Edwards. This vocal group has sung over the people's broadcast, the daily religious series, in local Baptist churches and other places. Miss Bunyea is the niece of Dr. Hubert T. Bunyea, pastor from 1910 until 1913. Her mother, Mrs. Emmett Bunyea, also is an active worker.

Fountain Memorial Church was a mission of Grace, Anacostia and East Washington Heights Baptist Churches until 1908, when its name was changed to Randall Highland Baptist. In 1921 it was renamed in honor of Fountain, Sunday School head at Washington Heights Baptist.

The Rev. Mr. King, who came here in 1936, is a graduate of Northeast High School, Philadelphia; attended Princeton Theological Seminary, Southern Baptist Seminary and the Graduate School of American University. He served pastorates in Clay City, Ind., and Steuben, Me.

In 1931 he married Miss Edith C. Neilson, a local girl. They have two children, and reside at 2210 Q street southeast.

Mr. Dies' New Chance

With a new lease on life and promises of a generous appropriation, the Committee on Un-American Activities will have an opportunity to show what it is capable of doing. Heretofore an alleged insufficiency of funds and refusal of Government departments to aid its investigation have been advanced as excuses for hasty and superficial inquiries into subversive activities.

Upon Mr. Dies, who undoubtedly will serve as chairman of the reorganized committee, will fall the chief responsibility for the success or failure of the committee's efforts. The way in which hearings have heretofore been conducted has given rise to justified criticism. If the committee is to gain a reputation for thorough work and fair-mindedness it must make more careful preparation for hearings, select witnesses with more discrimination, and above all approach its task with an open mind. Intemperate outbursts and extravagant assertions must hereafter be avoided if Mr. Dies wishes to impress the American people with the reality of the insidious influences at work to undermine our democratic form of government.

In spite of handicaps resulting from pressure of time and shortage of funds, as well as from defective procedure, the Dies committee has acquired a mass of data that show the need for further investigation. Popular interest in the inquiry and demands for its continuance indicate that the people, too, are awakening to the menace of alien political philosophies and anti-American movements in our midst. The attitude of the public, indeed, together with the new spirit of independence in Congress, largely explains why Mr. Dies has so successfully resisted the efforts of the Administration to dislodge him from his post of vantage.

The danger is that Mr. Dies may interpret the heavy vote in the House for continuation of the inquiry as an indorsement of everything he has done to date. If he is wise, however, he will profit by the criticism of those who applaud his purpose but disapprove the methods employed to get at pertinent facts. For it is facts that are needed—facts not distorted by bias nor misinterpreted for political effect.

Pension Fantasies

Representative Sheppard, of California, told the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday that he has deserted the Townsend organization because its leaders are holding out false hopes in promising to obtain $200 monthly pensions for the aged. But his public repudiation of Townsendism would be more encouraging had he been content to let well enough alone. Unfortunately, he has rejected a patently fantastic proposal to clear the way for a pension plan even more dangerous because it seems, at first glance, to be more feasible.

The Sheppard plan provides for a 2 per cent levy on gross incomes in excess of $100 per month to finance pension payments for all persons over 60 years of age. Estimating that the 2 per cent levy would yield over $7,000,000,000 annually, Mr. Sheppard concludes that it would provide pensions averaging $48 per month for more than 12,000,000 Americans in the covered age groups.

Even assuming these estimates to be correct, they make no provision for an anticipated steady increase in the proportion of the population over 60—an increase that would doubtless raise the cost of the plan to dizzy heights. Nor is any allowance made for the serious economic dislocations that would result from transferring billions of dollars from wage-earners to persons in the inactive upper age groups.

The advocates of the Sheppard plan and other impractical proposals of like nature are seeking to substitute them for the contributory old-age insurance system and the limited noncontributory pensions provided for under the social security act. They reject the sound principle embodied in that act of making insured workers and industry responsible for financing the cost of old-age insurance. Moreover, under the substitute noncontributory plans no way exists for varying payments with reference to former earning capacity of the pensioned.

Even under the existing insurance system—the outcome of prolonged and careful study by expert students of social insurance—there is grave doubt as to the ability of the country to support the scale of pensions contemplated. For we should not forget that to the pay roll levies for old-age insurance are added the costs of unemployment compensation, and ultimately of sickness and disability insurance. It would be the height of folly, therefore, to commit the country to indeterminately large outlays for a type of pension plan neither adjusted to individual needs nor related to the individual's past contributions to the industrial society which is called upon to support him in old age.

Those who assert that a large proportion of the population can be supported in idleness by the rest of the people are either ignorant of the limited resources available for distribution, or else they resemble those Townsendites whom Representative Sheppard accuses of deliberate misrepresentation.

The Fight For Health

Once more attention has been focused on the woeful inadequacy of Washington's public health facilities. For the most part, Col. Herbert B. Hayden's report as business manager for the local Health Department summarized previous official recommendations. Since the chief need of the department is to secure action on plans long since formulated, however, the report should serve a useful purpose.

When Dr. George C. Ruhland became health officer of the District in 1935 he surveyed conditions and recommended a 10-year program of improvements. That program was brought up to date when the Health Department took over the municipal hospitals from the Board of Public Welfare in 1937. More recently the United States Public Health Service outlined the necessary steps to bring health service in the District up to recognized standards. There has been no want of planning in this field, but the execution of these plans has been painfully slow.

Construction of a health center in the Southwest area is scheduled to begin next month. When completed, that institution will be a vital salient in the fight against disease. But the city needs four health centers if it is to provide proper treatment for indigents in the early stages of disease. Authorities agree that such treatment would reduce the demand for more expensive hospital care as well as saving many lives.

At present the most urgent need is for a health center in the northwest central area. Funds for such a center were appropriated once but later withdrawn by Congress because of different views as to how they should be spent. The least Congress can do is to restore this item in the 1940 local budget.

Gallinger Hospital, too, is urgently in need of improvements. It is well to remember that this institution was built for a city less than half the size of the Washington of today. While some of its deficiencies are to be removed, with the aid of PWA funds, many others will remain unless a consistent program of rehabilitation is adopted. For example, the kitchen designed to serve 350 patients is being used in a desperate effort to serve 1,200. Housing accommodations for the hospital staff are a disgrace to the Nation's Capital.

Dr. Ruhland has repeatedly asked for more public health nurses as a means of saving both lives and hospital expenses. His immediate objective is two nursing units, each including ten field nurses. In formulating their budget the District Commissioners made allowance for one such unit, but even that was eliminated by the Federal Budget Bureau.

Fortunately, the city is now well aware of its grave health problem. But its campaign must continue until Congress, too, recognizes the desirability of using modern weapons in the fight against disease.

Japan Presses On

When, last October, Canton and Hankow fell in quick succession to the Japanese invaders, the belief was widely entertained in Japan and elsewhere that the undeclared war in China was about over. Deprived of every port on the Pacific and most of her railroad mileage, China, it was said, could not continue the struggle much longer.

Events have belied that prediction. Today, more than three months after the fall of Hankow, Chinese resistance shows no signs of diminishing. From his new base in China's Far West, Chiang Kai-shek continues the war. As a demonstration of this spirit, there is the fact that, despite incredible difficulties, a 2,100-mile road has been built from the new capital, Chunking, to the border of Burma, thus providing a "back-door" route through which arms and supplies can reach the Chinese armies.

In the face of this situation, the Japanese find it impossible to rest on past victories. They must press on, though it means extending already over-extended lines of communications. They must spend more of their rapidly diminishing substance in seeking to deliver that knockout blow which China has thus far evaded. That is why they are now pressing up the Yangtze from Hankow to Ichang. But the farther Japan penetrates into the interior of China the more parlous her own position becomes. Not only has Chiang Kai-shek's armies proved elusive but there is hardly a mile of conquered territory which is not being contested by guerrillas.

In her quest for empire, Japan appears at last to have overreached herself. She has already spent more on this war than she spent on all her other wars combined. But with each passing day the possibility that she will utimately be able to recoup herself steadily grows dimmer. Though Japan has won every battle, the real victory she seeks may never be achieved.

Bilateral Trade Lags

In a Department of Commerce report released today, Dr. Henry Chalmers, chief of the Division of Foreign Tariffs, says: "Despite the spread of German barter arrangements, analysis of the trade records finds that the relative recovery in the value of German exports from the depth of the depression has not been as great as that of either the United States or the United Kingdom."

Since the United States is chiefly concerned about the effect of barter agreements upon our trade with Latin America, it is especially encouraging to learn from Dr. Chalmers that "such official figures as are available for 1938 show that, in general, the United States maintained its important position in most of the major markets of Latin America."

It is admitted that in certain lines of goods and in certain Latin-American markets, our exporters are encountering increased competition from German products under barter and subsidy arrangements. Moreover, in recent months Germany has been intensifying her efforts to establish restrictive bilateral agreements that may lead to further encroachments upon our export trade later on.

Nevertheless, it is well to be reminded that the totalitarian states, and lesser countries whose trade is rigidly controlled, carry on a comparatively small percentage of all world commerce. The countries operating "on a predominantly open and competitive basis," Dr. Chalmers says, account for over 70 per cent in value of all world trade.

Even more reassuring than the record of limited accomplishment under barter agreements is the knowledge that various countries with which Germany and other totalitarian States have made special arrangements are reported to be dissatisfied with the results. In some cases, there have accumulated in Germany frozen credits which the creditor countries have virtually been forced to devote to the purchase of German products in excess of amounts that would normally be desired. Again, resentment has been aroused by the discovery that products sold to Germany under barter arrangements have been resold to other countries with a view to obtaining free exchange.

In short, the evidence indicates that increasing opposition will be encountered by nations endeavoring to use bilateral trade pacts or barter agreements as a means of aggressively forcing exports upon the world. That fact should, and doubtless will, encourage the countries operating on a competitive basis, free of hampering controls, to put up a stiffer fight against invasion of their markets by the totalitarian states.

A Shocking Accident

Washington is shocked by the hit-and-run slaying of Representative Caldwell's son. Highway fatalities are tragic enough in any circumstances. When a youngster is crushed in the street and left to die, however, the awareness of tragedy is mingled with a much wider community feeling of indignation over the outrage.

Maj. Brown properly instructed precinct commanders to "have all police on duty" in an effort to bring the hit-and-run driver to justice. Crimes of this sort ought not to be left to routine investigation. For, whether or not there was gross negligence on the part of the driver in striking the boy, there is a strong presumption that he knowingly left the lad to die without aid. That is a particularly despicable offense which calls for the best detective efforts of which the Police Department is capable.

It may have been only chance that no policeman was in the vicinity when the accident occurred. Yet it is frequently said that officers on duty are less in evidence in Washington than in other cities. And there are many indications that police protection here is inadequate. A tragedy like that which has befallen Representative Caldwell's family gives special point to the fact that ample police protection is no extravagance.

"Men have inhabited the world for more than 2,000,000 years," declares a scientist. And yet they haven't been able to figure out any way to run the darned thing except on credit.

Whoami

From Coronet.

If you are a race track habitue, doubtless you have noticed on your program a horse with the unusual name Whoami, owned by J. C. Winfrey.

His odd name came as an inspiration after six had been rejected. Winfrey was standing by the door of the colt's stall on his Kentucky breeding farm the day he received notification that none of the half-dozen names he had submitted was acceptable.

Winfrey reflected bitterly that by the time he found a name that would stick, the promising colt would probably have become too infirm from age to race. "I don't know what to name you," he addressed the animal petulantly. "Who are you, anyhow?" Then hastily he filled in another application for the name Whoami, and this name stuck.

Letters On The Spanish Issue

"Not Too Late"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Until the present time I have never written to a newspaper on any issue. I feel impelled, however, at this time to add my voice to the ever-increasing number of those who demand the lifting of the Spanish embargo.

It is incomprehensible to me why it was not done months ago, before the death and misery of Barcelona, where a courageous but poorly armed people were massacred by the war machines of two ruthless foreign fascist nations.

The cry of "Too late, it's all over now," is heard frequently at this time. This and similar sentiments are uttered by those who are either defeatists by nature or who are opposed to lifting the embargo and find such phrases an excellent way to further their opposition without exposing themselves for what they are.

Spain is not yet conquered. It is not too late to lift the embargo. Remember the indomitable defense of Madrid. Given an opportunity to buy arms, Spain has yet a good chance of victory. If Spain falls we must account ourselves her betrayer.

Fascists are never appeased, as we found out after Munich. The conquering of Spain would put them so much closer to us, so close that their presence and effects would be discernible even to those who today in true ostrich fashion proclaim "Europe is 3,000 miles away, what goes on there is no concern of ours."

Now is the time to do what we can to try to stop this mad march of the dictators which threatens to overrun the whole world.

To Be Really Neutral

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every American should be a "committee of one for keeping out of other people's quarrels." No American, unless he wishes to see this country embroiled in war, should advocate lifting an embargo here, or placing one there. There are far too many busybodies dabbling in our foreign relations, far too many starry-eyed idealists who are drinking in the propaganda being fed us by foreign agents.

What if we did ship 1,000,000 tons of scrap iron to Japan in the first eight months of 1938. We shipped that much and more to the rest of the world—1,300,000 tons, to be exact. What did the United Kingdom do with the 386,000 tons we shipped her? Feed it to babies? Certainly not. She probably bombed helpless Arabs with some of it in Palestine. So what? What did Italy do with the 304,000 tons we shipped her? She bombed helpless Abyssinians and loyalist Spaniards with it. So what? Why, we even shipped 186,000 tons to Germany. Altogether we shipped scrap iron to 36 foreign countries, including Spain, China and Palestine. If we want to be neutral why ship any scrap iron abroad at all?

If we want to be really neutral we shouldn't ship anything abroad at all. There is no point in putting an embargo on our shipments to a single country for everyone knows that scrap iron shipped to the Netherlands is not used in the Netherlands but shipped to Germany. We could not be sure that petroleum or trucks shipped to Belgium would not find their way to Japan, Germany or Italy. So to be really neutral and avoid any of our materials reaching aggressors we must do as Jefferson did in 1807 and declare an embargo on all outgoing shipments. We know what that did to business in the United States at that time.

COMMITTEE OF ONE.

Franco and the Church

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Catholics, here and abroad, have been bilked into believing that Franco, with the assistance of Hitler and Mussolini, is the front line defender of Christianity. No more vicious lie has ever been more skillfully inculcated in so great a number of people, nor more blindly believed without an investigation of the facts.

Hitler and Mussolini, seeking to harass France and England, instigated and helped finance Franco's uprising. Mussolini has never concealed his contempt for the Vatican and its many spiritual adherents. Hitler has imprisoned and persecuted thousands of priests and nuns by trumping up some of the most obscene and revolting moral charges against them. Defenders of the Faith, indeed! If Franco ever completely triumphs over his brethren in Spain (Cain succeeded in slaying Abel), Catholicism will feel the pressure from three points instead of two. IMPERTINAX.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your paper at one time carried an editorial favoring lifting the embargo against Republican Spain. Your paper has a powerful voice. Speak again, before it is too late, for lifting the embargo.

Gluttons for Punishment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It seems incredible that such a large element of our population appears intent upon dragging America into the next European mess to save the world once more for "democracy." We read daily of our radicals, Communists, near-Communists and parlor pinks clamoring for the lifting of an embargo to loyalist Spain, special aid to the democracies and what not. Have these same people so soon forgotten the fact that these same democracies, for which many of us are seeking aid, thumbed their noses at the United States in refusing to pay their honest war debts.

Are we gluttons for punishment? It seems particularly shocking to read that high officials in our Government are included in this group. These people still feel that we should take the lead in policing the world, a thing we cannot do unless we are willing, ready and anxious to fight.

Haven't we enough to do right here—many social and economic adjustments and the strengthening of our national defenses for home protection—without inviting trouble elsewhere? There is apparently a sinister force directing this movement. It would be interesting to learn the source. G. F. M.
Washington, Jan. 31.

"The Last Straw"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For many months all your news has been colored by your devotion to the many communistic organizations supporting the red slaughter of Catholics in Spain. Your editorials likewise. If an American group has in its title the word "democracy," it is sufficient to obtain your passionate support. It makes no difference that it is communistic through and through. Listen to Father Coughlin sometime for a little enlightenment, not that I agree with him entirely but his facts bear investigation.

The Post has been conspicuous in this short-sighted anti-Christianity. The full-page "Lift the Embargo" ad this morning was the last straw, even if it was a paid advertisement. It attunes perfectly to your general theme song.

A. H. MONACELLI.
Washington, Feb. 1.

Claims News Is Colored

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Too much propaganda is flooding the Nation, in the form of printed pamphlets, newspaper articles and editorials and letters to the editor, urging that the United States lift the arms embargo against republican Spain. Especially our large daily newspapers, which always have been a powerful force in influencing public opinion, have failed in their obligation to present news fair and impartially by not adequately presenting both sides of the Spanish conflict.

Newspaper editorial policy, in the placement of news, types of headlines written and pictures used, play up too much of the news favoring the loyalist government, while relegating news of the other side to inconspicuous parts of the paper or omitting it entirely. The Washington Post, despite its excellent staff, news-gathering services and syndicated articles, has shown a pronounced recent trend in favoring action to lift the embargo.

The gullible American public, who unfortunately believe too much of what they read in the press, allows certain active minorities to do their thinking for them and thereby influence their opinions on matters of which they know very little of the real facts. No wonder more than 70 per cent of the American public favor lifting the embargo when most of the news they read about the Spanish conflict is colored to favor the so-called loyalist republican government.

If anything is to be done about the selling of munitions to foreign nations it should be the curbing of all such sales, rather than permitting the free flow of destructive weapons. For how can the cause of peace be furthered by selling munitions that will prolong an already too-bloody conflict? How can the continued destruction of human lives, natural resources and property be called a justifiable means to secure peace? The Spanish people are the innocent victims, their soil is being used as a battleground of communism against fascism, the latter being born as a necessity to combat the former.

The best way to avoid getting tangled up in European disputes is to stay out of the whole affair. If anything is to be done about altering the embargo laws let it be changed to prevent the sale of arms to all foreign nations. That would be a better type of neutrality and impartiality than anything else.

TIMOTHY Mc.
Washington, Feb. 1.

Denounces Advertisement

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The open letter in your issue of February 1 is a libel on the intelligence of your readers. I can readily believe that there are human beings who will be influenced by such paid propaganda, but if lifting the embargo means to avoid "intervention in European civil war" then black is white and the Pope is a Baptist. U. S. A.
Washington, Feb. 1.

Unfair Neutrality

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Being a constant reader of your paper, and also having faith in your principles of democracy, I implore you to speak out now against such unfair and hypocritical neutrality. Demand that democracies act in their own interest. Call for the lifting of the embargo against republican Spain. WALTER F. MOORE.

The Post Impressionist

Worthies Into Waxworks

WHEN OSCAR WILDE said that nature copies art, it is probable that he mentioned only art because he was a professional esthetician. It is also likely that his hearers concluded he was straining after an epigram without any great regard for truth.

Yet observation since Wilde's day has done much to confirm his dictum. Even professors of advertising, and writers for and about the movies, can summon 1,000 instances to prove it.

It seems, moreover, that instances need not be limited to art—unless you call the newsreels, newspaper illustrations, radio broadcasting and televisions, examples of art—as perhaps you do. These things have their rise in science, but so learned a person as Havelock Ellis includes science under art.

Whether you call it art or science, the fact remains that human nature today is molded by the news camera, the microphone and television. Moreover, instead of only imitating art the subjects of these things tend to become identical with it. They freeze into portraits and statuary before our eyes and ears. And, having little surcease from the demands upon them, they tend to become that way at any hour of the day and night. Even when they propose sitting down in a hotel to fruit compote and filet mignon they must wear a fixed and noble expression usually reserved for statues in public squares.

In consequence our celebrities are becoming the world's first living waxworks. In another generation the only distinction that can be claimed for Mme. Tussaud's establishment is that the effigies there do not merely seem dead—they are dead.

It may be objected that in classifying such persons as Stalin, Hitler, the Duke of Windsor, Prime Minister Chamberlain, Mussolini, Greta Garbo, Secretary Hopkins, Chief Justice Hughes and Charles Augustus Lindbergh as waxworks. I have departed from my own thesis and that of Oscar Wilde. I do not, however, propose to investigate whether waxworks as we have known them exemplify art or science, or whether they indicate an attempt of art to copy nature or the reverse. That would be to confuse the issue.

I state simply that human nature has become so subservient to scientific art, and so emulative of it, that public men and women have emerged into a middle ground between art and nature. In this demi-world they have a likeness to nothing else so much as waxworks.

The process whereby the metamorphosis has occurred, and is occurring, can be observed by anyone with the price of a ticket to the theater or to a hotel where the great sit down at exalted guest tables to listen, presumably, to the inanities of toastmasters. And to be seen by their constituencies of one sort or another.

Take such a dinner, for example. Some minutes before the guests are to arrive the room is filled with weird shrieking and howling. That is the public address system being tried. At the same time individuals are conducting a snaky black wire from some obscure source to a rostrum near the head table where shortly appears the inevitable microphone. A few photographers wander disconsolately about, judging distances and points of views from which to make their "shots."

There is a stir near the doorway. One or more of the expected celebrities tries to make an entrance. Instantly a group of picture men rush in that direction, their arms upraised in a kind of Fascist salute.

"Hold it, Mr. Secretary!"

"Look toward Mrs. Secretary!"

"Smile!"

There is a flash of photographer's lightning. Another. The guest meanwhile emulates a statue.

"Let's try it once more."

The guest pauses again, smiles pitifully at his companions. They smile rather stiffly in return. Then all freeze again.

"Thank you, Mr. Secretary."

Perhaps five minutes later the guest arrives at his table, only to find a whole row of effigies standing like figures cut down from the hooks in a Bluebeard's closet. They are confronted by an almost equal number of cameras, and display what they hope is fixed serenity.

After four or five minutes they relax for a moment, but instantly return to quasi-immobility as the lightning flashes caused by individual photographers making special shots from various directions begin playing over the room.

This ends only as the toastmaster gets up to say in a deprecating tone that everyone should face the revolving camera and keep perfectly still while the "official" picture of the gathering is being made.

A few surreptitious bites of food may be taken now—or at any rate the guests hope they can. But the impression proves false. Somewhere a musical note has been sounded and the guest is required to breathe into the microphone for the putative benefit of the hungry diners and a "great unseen audience" that is happily doing everything from guzzling beer to painting its toenails. Homemade Bolshevism

MOST AMERICAN writers who have inspected Hitlerism in Germany have agreed, on returning here, that the prize suckers of the plot were the German capitalists, businessmen and aristocrats who thought Hitler would protect them and treat them with special kindness. The bolsheviks of this and other countries at first seemed to think so, too. Possibly they did think so, for a Bolo might conceivably be honest by mistake, and Hitler developed his system by degrees, borrowing from bolshevism as he went along.

But after they had boosted Hitler to power the German princes of privilege, to use a term popular with the Bolo-Nazi-Fascists in this country, discovered that he had given them bolshevism as a protection against bolshevism. It was homemade bolshevism, but the ingredients were the same, and the only difference, aside from the labels, was a slight variation in some proportions. Some bartenders use a little more vermouth, some a little less.

Gang Protection Against Gangs

YET, BECAUSE Hitler constantly screamed against bolshevism and called his racket national socialism, most of us here were slow to detect the sameness. Moreover, our own bolsheviks denounced as deliberate substitution and dishonest practice every attempt to show that one product was as good, or as bad, as the other.

And, be it said again, Hitler developed slowly. The trick was not new, being familiar in our rackets in which one gang compels a merchant to kick in for protection against another gang which may not even exist or, if it does exist, may operate exclusively in another neighborhood, 'way on the other side of town.

German capitalists are allowed to think they control their property as long as they do not attempt to exercise control or take down profits beyond the amounts fixed by the state as compensation for their work. They may enjoy the sensation of expansion, if they receive orders or permission to branch out, but the increase isn't theirs, either. They just manage the property. And only recently, in a story about the final extinction of the officer corps, Mr. Tolischus, of the New York Times, reported that an officer now enjoys no social superiority with his rank. He just has a better job in the army than his subordinates. In Germany the nominal owners or controllers of property live better than the common toilers, but the same is true in Russia of those who perform duties of corresponding importance for the state.

Hitler Hasn't Developed Yet

THE STATUS of religion is no different in either country in any important respect, for our Bolos now tell us that one may go to church in Russia if he can find a church and can take the punishment, while in Germany Christ is regarded as an internationalist, and church leaders have been persecuted, tossed into prison and even tossed out of windows in periods of healthy reaction of the Nazi spirit. Moreover, Hitler hasn't fully developed his anti-church policy, and by the time he is through it probably will be just as hard to find a church in Germany as in Russia.

In both countries people are staked to the land if they are farmers or chained to their appointed jobs, and the concentration or deportation camp and the firing squad are equally familiar in both.

Every institution which the bolsheviks praise as a virtue of the Bolo system in Russia is duplicated by Hitler's bolshevism, and it may be observed that if the Russians would adopt anti-Semitism, at which they were very able hands in the Czar's time, or if the Germans would drop it, as they surely would without the constant artificial stimulus, the German bolsheviks and the Russians could fall into each other's arms crying "Brother!"

What They Hate Is Own Belief

IT MAKES OUR bolsheviks very angry to be told and to see it proved that the thing which they claim to hate with such nobility is, with differences too trifling for serious consideration, the very thing that they profess and try to sell us. It angers the Nazi-Fascists to be told the same thing, for the same reason. It is like hearing a bore denounce another bore and saying to him, "You bore me."

It would be strange to see both camps of Bolos in a great reconciliation and union, but that mentality is capable of anything. We see evidences of that all the time. We saw it in the last election here when bolsheviks who had damned Frank Hague, of Jersey City, with great ferocity decided that, after all, if they could deliver for Mr. Roosevelt's man then that end justified all the corrupt and oppressive misuse of power which had been charged against him.

Letters On The Spanish Issue

Says It Is Our Fight

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The injection of a religious issue into the Spanish question has been unfortunate from the beginning, but in the hysteria of their prejudices many citizens refused to check their facts and blindly hailed Gen. Franco and his foreign troops as the savior, if not of Spain, at least of Christianity. Now that the reverse has been proven true by conservative and reliable observers of the conflict, it is to be hoped that those who erred on the side of the dictators will also lend their aid towards the lifting of the embargo, so that the Spanish people can rid their land of the invaders and restore the republic.

It is our fight—politically and culturally we belonged in this battle from the start. We mouthed phrases about democracy and freedom of religion and speech, we made verbal attacks upon the totalitarian powers, and all the while we saw the borders and spheres of influence for Fascism spread. We saw the territories of democracies disappear beneath waves of brown and blackshirted robots—we saw this and spoke of liberty while shipping the staples of militarism to the aggressor nations.

Lifting the embargo is the most decent and most logical thing we can do as a democratic nation and people. To retain this embargo is to play into the hands of the dictators and would inevitably result in the destruction of our own security and government. It is hard to believe that any American would protest the lifting of this embargo—unless he was forced to do so by the pressure of an outside and alien group. JOHN C. ROGERS.

Like Antony Mourning

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just read "An Open Letter" in this morning's Post. It is hysterical nonsense. I would sign the coupon attached only with red ink.

It is the same old tune that this group sings, "Save democracy." I thought we tried that nonsense before, 20 some years ago. This time we are to save democracy for Spain. The last time it was saved for poor benighted Germany, for Italy and France and England. The next time it will be to save it for Japan. It would be wiser to save it now for America.

Let us make fools of ourselves by sending arms to Spain! What ships will carry them? Have the loyalists a merchant marine to do this for themselves? No, indeed! Will American ships carry them? That means they will be attacked by Franco and either captured or sunk. Either way means war. Will English or French or Russian ships carry them? It still means war. If England or France thought Spanish democracy worth saving why have they not paid the price of admission into the war! Shall we force them to join us in a war that they are not prepared to wage?

I strongly recommend to the sanity of this group, if indeed they have any left, an article which appeared in the December 19 issue of the magazine Life. It appears on page 44 and continues through page 57.

The article I refer to was prepared with the co-operation of the public relations officers of the War Department. It has not been challenged. Hence to me it seems worse than foolish to listen to this group who cry "Lift the embargo now." "Ship arms to Spain." It is embarking on a course that would endanger our peace and safety.

This group is like Antony mourning and weeping over the dead body of Caesar. Caesar was no democrat either. The course of action which they advocate would lead to the destruction of what they profess to espouse—namely, peace and democracy. It would spread war and not bring peace abroad. At home, it would lead to confusion and disunity.

We have listened to this song "Save democracy" long enough. I heard the same tune on my radio the other night. It came from Moscow. MICHAEL J. DOODY.

Reply From Mr. Montavon

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: I am grateful for the publication in The Post of February 1 of the statement of F. L. P. The author of this statement has visited some of the places in Spain with which I am familiar. He intimates that I said that "Generalissimo" Franco would bring "free institutions to Spain." What I did say was that the Popular Front government was not "notably republican" and that to liberate the people of Spain might liberate the "patriotic forces existing in Spain and set them once more on the road to a truly national government that will be representative of all the people of Spain."

I do not know what form of government may be set up in Spain. On one occasion Franco said: "The form of government I intend to set up will be a suit of clothes made to fit Spaniards." I like that.

I have found nothing in the writings or statements of Gen. Franco to indicate a rejection of the spirit of nationalism that is thus stated by him.

Moreover, I do not believe that the form of government to be adopted by Franco in any way affects the proposal that his government be recognized. The form of government of a country with whom we are in friendly relations is not our business. It is the policy of governments in which we have a right to be interested, particularly when those policies run parallel to or affect our own as the policies of the new Spanish government probably will.

A Parallel Cited

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For your efforts in the cause of democracy and especially for your editorial "The Neutrality Muddle" and your cartoon "The Good Samaritan" in The Post of February 2 you deserve the thanks of that large part of the American public whose opinion you presented. Such expression is sorely needed in our world where, too often, an insignificant and much too noisy group, selfishly motivated, can becloud real issues with the veil of godliness and mouthings of peace. The question of lifting the Spanish embargo must be answered by the whole of our democracy, and not by one small selfish element which takes advantage of the rights which democracy has given it.

The finest of reasons for lifting the Spanish embargo can be found in the following passages from "The Autobiography of John Hays Hammond," Vol. 2, page 752:

"When the Mexican revolution of 1923 broke out, Obregon had no money to pay his soldiers and could obtain no arms because of the United States embargo on the shipment of munitions into Mexico. We heard that Obregon had tried to borrow money from other oil companies. Finally one of his emissaries came to see Harris (Hammond's son), who at once telephoned me in Washington.

"I told him that if he could advance the money I would go at once to Secretary of War Weeks and explain that Obregon had been legally elected President and had been recognized by our Government. Unless he could at once secure arms from the United States anarchy would once more be let loose in Mexico. Moreover, if De la Huerta should win, relations between the United States and Mexico would be imperiled because of the rebel's well-known unfriendliness to our Government.

"Upon learning that the Administration had already turned down De la Huerta's request for guns, I urged Secretary Weeks to send down airplanes or anything else in the way of fighting equipment that might help Obregon to win.

"Weeks assured me of his sympathy with my views. I then called upon President Coolidge and told him: 'We'll be the laughing-stock of the world if we don't send guns to Mexico. Look what happened when Wilson refused to support Huerta. If we allow Obregon to be overthrown, we shall be put in a ridiculous position, as we have already rendered him some aid and are committed to his cause. We've simply got to keep Obregon and Calles in power in spite of the revolution!'

"Coolidge assured me of his determination to support Obregon to the full extent of his power.

"The money was supplied and the embargo was lifted."

This is our parallel. Let us follow it. Lift the Spanish embargo.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

U. S. Foreign Policy in the Making: Mr. Hoover's Speech

NO ONE IN EUROPE, and apparently very few in this country, can have read the full text of Mr. Hoover's Chicago speech. For while the impression has gone out that Mr. Hoover has a policy which would keep the United States out of a European war, Mr. Hoover went much further than the President has ever gone in telling Hitler and Mussolini to count on American intervention if they attack France and England.

Here is what he said: "We must not close our eyes to one condition under which the American people, disregarding all other questions, might join in a European war. We are a humane people, and our humanity can be overstrained by brutality. That was one of the causes of our entry into the last war. For instance, if wholesale attack were made upon women and children by the deliberate destruction of cities from the air, then the indignation of the American people could not be restrained from action."

Mr. Hoover then went on to emphasize this warning as to how Americans would feel and act if the bombing planes were let loose on London and Paris.

"I do not believe officials of any nation have become so foolish or dare the depth of barbarism of such an undertaking. The indignation in the United States today at such killings in Spain and China, where it is excused as the accident of attempt to demoralize munitions supply, should be warning of the temper which would be raised."

Hoover And Roosevelt Really See Eye To Eye

IN VIEW OF the fact that there can be no war in Europe which would not begin with a tremendous aerial bombardment of the civilian populations of London and Paris, former President Hoover's remarks have just one possible meaning: that he hopes to preserve the peace by dissuading Hitler and Mussolini from starting a war, and that he hopes to dissuade them by warning them in advance that the United States will intervene.

Is this not exactly what the President has been trying to do? Is there any difference between the President and the former President on this, the most fundamental of all questions, on how best to prevent war? Except that Mr. Hoover as a private citizen is absolutely outspoken in his threat of force, whereas Mr. Roosevelt, as an official, has been much more cautious in his public statements, the two men see eye to eye on the main issue. They both see that the destruction of London and Paris and the massacre by aerial bombardment of about 35,000 civilians a day would rouse American opinion to uncontrollable indignation. They both see that the most likely way to preserve the peace is to make this clear before Berlin and Rome irrevocably commit themselves to a position which means war.

Differ On Method Of Conducting Policy

BEING AGREED on these fundamental elements of the situation, Mr. Hoover and Mr. Roosevelt differ somewhat on the method of conducting our foreign policy. Mr. Hoover is opposed to the policy of attempting to discriminate between aggressors and victims of aggression, of helping China and France, for example, to get arms in this country, of preventing Japan from getting arms in this country. For my own part, I agree with Mr. Hoover that "measures short of war," that is to say, moral sanctions, boycotts, discriminating embargoes and the like are ineffective, invite reprisals, are irritating, provocative, confusing and dangerous.

But it is only fair, and it is very important, that Mr. Hoover should remember that it was he, and not Mr. Roosevelt, who inaugurated what he calls this "new departure in foreign policies." The first of the great aggressions occurred in his Administration when Japan invaded Manchuria in 1931. And it was his Secretary of State, Mr. Henry L. Stimson, acting with his full support and authority, who sent an American representative to the League of Nations at Geneva to arouse world opinion against Japan. It was in his Administration that there was first promulgated the doctrine, known sometimes as the Stimson doctrine, and sometimes as the Hoover doctrine, that the United States would not recognize titles obtained by conquest and in violation of treaties. It was Mr. Hoover, acting through Mr. Secretary Stimson, who persuaded President-elect Roosevelt to adopt this doctrine in 1933. It was Mr. Hoover who concentrated the American battle fleet at Hawaii to impress Japan. And it is Mr. Hoover's Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, who today heads the movement asking for an embargo against Japan.

Profoundly True But What To Do About It?

SO WHILE Mr. Hoover has every right to change his mind, and is, so it seems to me, right in changing his mind, it will clarify the discussion if it is recognized that he has changed his mind. For then only can we see the practical issue on which the American people have to make up their minds.

Mr. Hoover has not yet made up his own mind on that issue. He has told us three vitally important things. The one is that if war breaks out in Europe, there is no hope that we "could" stay out of it. The second is that the hope of preventing war lies in persuading Berlin and Rome that they could not win. The third is that both before war breaks out and after, it is dangerous for the United States to discriminate against one side. That is what Mr. Hoover said at Chicago, and it is all, I believe, profoundly true. The question then is: What do we do about it?

What is the best thing we can do now to prevent a European war, and if possible to stay out of it if war cannot be prevented?

MY OWN view, for what it is worth, is that we should open our markets in war and in peace without any discrimination to all governments that can pay cash for arms and can carry them away. Except, of course, that the United States Government must have priority for its own military needs in all American factories, neutrality of this kind would take the American Government out of the munitions business entirely. The Government would not be discriminating against Japan. It would not be discriminating in favor of France and Great Britain. It would not be deciding who is the aggressor and who is not. It would not be protecting shipments of arms, as it did in 1914-1917. It would not have the American people lending money to foreign governments. It would not be refusing to let nations which are threatened with attack obtain arms to defend themselves if they can pay for them and can come and get them.

Suggested Remedy: Sell Arms To All

ANY OTHER POLICY is, it seems to me, loaded with dynamite. In the past year, for example, after Great Britain, the next biggest purchaser of arms in the United States has been the Netherlands. Why? Because the Netherlands, a little country without military resources, is in danger of being attacked by Japan in the Dutch East Indies and perhaps also by Germany in Europe. But if Japan took it into her head to make a formal declaration of war against the Netherlands, our laws would automatically compel us to place an embargo against the Netherlands. It does not make sense to give Japan the power to decide whether we shall sell arms to the Netherlands. And it does not make sense to give Hitler and Mussolini the power to decide whether we shall sell arms to France and Great Britain. Giving them that power is an added inducement to them to go to war.

The remedy is to say that we shall allow American manufacturers to sell arms to all comers who can pay for them and carry them away. That does away with discrimination, with bankers' loans, with the whole trouble of 1914-1917 about trying to protect American munitions ships in the war zone. For there would be no American munitions ships in the war zone.

Least Entangling Policy Available

NO ONE CAN guarantee that this will preserve the peace or keep us certainly out of war. But it is much more likely to do it than any other policy which is within the bounds of the practical.

It is, I believe, the least entangling policy available. If we adopt it promptly and unanimously, we shall have what everyone is demanding, a foreign policy which everyone here and abroad will understand. Then our own arms program will be clear, too. For we can fix that program on the principles adopted by the Republican members of the Military Affairs Committee. Of these the two most important are, first, that we shall create "no standing army or military establishment intended for service overseas or capable of inducing an aggressive attitude by this Government," and, second, that we shall practice "freedom of trade under the spirit of true neutrality, this to include traffic in airplanes, with all nations receiving exactly equal treatment."

IN SHORT, a national policy on which both parties can unite is perfectly possible if only they take the trouble to understand one another patiently and to think clearly.

A Short, Ugly Word

By Mark Sullivan

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, at his press conference, was pretty vehement. He said that his foreign policy is misrepresented in the press. The word "misrepresented" is my word. I use that word in the interest of speaking softly. In matters having to do with war, to "speak softly" is a wise course. It was counseled 30 years ago by a President of that time, Theodore Roosevelt—his complete formula was: "Speak softly and carry a big stick."

But in candor to the reader, I ought to say that "misrepresented" was not the word President Franklin Roosevelt used in what he said about the press. He used "the shorter and uglier" word. He said "deliberate lie." And he told the correspondents they could quote that. (I was not sure whether Mr. Roosevelt meant this term for the newspapers, or for members of Congress who gave the newspaper men accounts of what had been said in a meeting between them and Mr. Roosevelt. (Congressmen ought not to repeat what Mr. Roosevelt tells them in confidence about foreign relations.)

In his press conference, as in other talks about the press, Mr. Roosevelt made a distinction. He spoke always of "newspaper owners." The implication is that it is the newspaper owners who are wicked. By implication he seemed to convey that newspaper writers are good fellows. As one of the class credited with virtue, I do not like to see Mr. Roosevelt make this distinction. It seems like a bit of adroitness.

Wholesome Feeling By Correspondents

HOWEVER, LET us drop what Mr. Roosevelt said about the press. My observation was that the correspondents seemed bored by it, which is wholesome. They wanted Mr. Roosevelt to talk about foreign relations. Presently he did. He gave out a prepared statement. I presume everybody has seen it. It was perfectly sound, so far as it went. But it was in general terms. It did not cover the principal question involved. In not covering the real question, Mr. Roosevelt is not alone. Few others cover it. Few seem to realize the question exists. What this question is, I shall try to explain. Understanding of this question will introduce some clarity into the confusion about those airplanes for France.

First, France orders some airplanes from American manufacturers. About that, standing alone, there is no reason for excitement. No neutrality law affects that transaction, for this is a peacetime transaction. It is as legitimate for American manufacturers to sell planes to France as for American farmers to sell wheat.

Second, the Roosevelt Administration gave sanction to the airplane sale, encouraged the American manufacturers to accept the order. That, too, is both legitimate and wholesome. On this point Mr. Roosevelt is completely right. There should always be informal consultation between Government and manufacturers about sales of war materials to foreign governments. Manufacturers ought to sell only if our Government sanctions the sale. In nearly all cases they follow this course. This informal co-operation is democracy functioning at its best. It is more flexible, and hence more wise, than any rigid statute that attempts to cover such matters.

Third, this sanctioning by the Administraiton of the sale to France was not made public. But this was not any dictatorial secrecy practiced by President Roosevelt. He consulted the Cabinet. Perhaps it would have been prudent and considerate for him to have told also the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, in confidence.

Secrecy Called Proper Action

THE SECRECY was proper. Here again Mr. Roosevelt is completely right. Not everything done by Government in the field of foreign relations can be done publicly. To have made the informal sanction a public matter would have changed it from an informal action to a formal one. It would have constituted a public offense to nations contemplating attacking France, or wanting France's airplane power kept inferior.

So far, we are on practically indiputable ground. But there arises an inevitable question. Put it thus: France (and England) order airplanes from American manufacturers. Necessarily they are for future delivery—the deliveries will go on over many months. Suppose, during that period, France or England becomes involved in actual war. At that point, will the American airplanes previously ordered continue to be delivered? Or, at that point, will our Government say to France or England, "Sorry, but our neutrality policy forbids sale of war material to countries engaged in war."

If France or England thought we would say that, would they order the planes? Would they rely upon a flow of planes from America if they thought the flow would be stopped at the time they have most need of them? In short, what is the Administration's policy, and what ought to be American policy, on this point?

THIS QUESTION is inevitably involved in the present incident. And this is the question many persons, including Mr. Roosevelt, seem to overlook. When Mr. Roosevelt is asked questions like this, questions about future contingencies, his frequent answer is that this is an "if" question. But this is not an "if" question. It is a present question, for it is inherent in the selling of planes to France.

I will not evade the question. I think we ought to continue to deliver the planes already ordered until all are delivered, regardless of whether actual war intervenes in the meantime. But on this question we ought to have discussion.

Foreign Policy

By Barnet Nover

U. S. Can't Be A Cipher, Is Today's Answer To Isolationists

AS A PEACEFUL nation, the foreign policy of the United States must be one which, above all, is most capable of keeping us at peace. On this point all sections and classes and parties in the United States are agreed. But how achieve this great objective?

Ever since the Treaty of Versailles, powerful elements in this country have argued that the way for the United States to stay at peace is to ignore all developments taking place abroad, to regard even wholly distasteful events as not sufficiently our concern to abandon the policy of inaction. They argue that way now.

But facts have a way of overriding theories, however plausible and however fervently held. During the past eight years the structure of peace in the world has steadily been undermined. Manchuria, Ethiopia, Spain, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia—these have been the way stations on the road to disaster. The road remains open and disaster threatens more ominously than ever.

Can We Ignore Fate Of Democracies?

CAN WE BLIND our eyes to that fact? If it really made no difference to us whether Europe stays at peace or plunges into war, if the fate of Great Britain and France and the other non-aggressive nations of the Old World could have no bearing on our fate, we might view the new European crisis with a fair measure of equanimity. We might, of course, being a sentimental people, shed a few tears over the fate of fellow democracies, even as we shed a few tears over Austria and Czecho-Slovakia and Spain, but then go back to cultivating our own garden secure in the belief that here, at any rate, the roses would bloom and the cabbages grow regardless of the storms raging elsewhere.

But can we take so complacent a view? The answer is that we cannot and we do not. There can be no mistaking the alarm felt by the American people over the spread of the plague of aggression in Asia and Africa and Europe. And this alarm has found concrete manifestation in the very general support given the plan to build up our armaments. Armaments when not the product of aggressive designs are the product of fear. We are arming because we are afraid.

President Is Key Of Defense System

WHY ARE we afraid? We're afraid because, in the first place, the United States, with the most peaceful intentions in the world, has managed to get involved in every world conflict since the beginning of our history. And there is every reason to believe that in the next war we may be no more capable of remaining uninvolved than we were in the last war.

But is rearmament enough? Obviously not. Our Army, Navy and air force constitute not our first but our last line of defense. It is the function of diplomacy to provide that first line. Only when the diplomats and statesmen fail must the generals and admirals be called in.

It is for this reason that the founding fathers of our Nation saw to it that the President was both commander in chief of the Army and Navy and director of our foreign policy. It is in his person that the defense system finds the necessary unity as between the political and the military.

IN EUROPE TODAY, there are nations as peaceful as we are. They, too, even as the United States, want to be let alone in possession of their present holdings. They hold no threat to us or to anyone else. But there are also nations whose past actions and present policies indicate that they are on the march. They are not satisfied with what they have; they want more.

It is possible that their desires can continue to be satisfied, as they have been, at the expense of nations in parts of the world remote from the New World. It is possible. But it would be a clear abdication of statesmanship to assume that. Nor have we. We have begun to rearm. But we have done more than that. We have striven with might and main to establish a degree of continental solidarity in the Americas beyond anything that existed before. We have taken a strong stand against Japanese aggression and are now indicating to the island empire that we have ways of supplementing our words by deeds.

U. S. Is 'Entangled' Commercially

IS IT POSSIBLE to do at least as much in Europe? The President has reiterated that we have no entangling alliances and are against them. Does that mean that we must at all costs refrain from rendering any legitimate assistance we can to the peaceful states or, as an alternative, treat them on a par with those that are not peaceful? That is what some insist our policy should be. That explains the outcry over the recent sale of planes to France and the indications that, far from disapproving of this sale, the Administration favors it.

In our commercial policy we discriminate against nations that discriminate against us. Nobody has raised the point that we have become "entangled" with those nations against whom we do not discriminate. Is there any essential difference in favoring, so far as we can, the peaceful nations as against the aggressors?

The point that is forgotten is that the United States is not and cannot be a cipher. Our impact on the world is enormous whether we realize it or not and whether we like it or not. Inaction by the United States means willingly or unwillingly favoring some nations and not favoring others; a positive policy has precisely the same result, although in that case we can guage our action to our needs and our interests. Certainly if, by doing what we can to help the forces of peace in Europe and restrain the forces leading to conflict, peace is preserved that would be all to the good so far as we are concerned. To wait for disaster to occur before doing anything about it is neither sensible nor safe.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

"A New Script For Grace And George"

George—But, Gracie, I tell you I can't take you to dinner tonight.

Gracie—Why not?

George—I'm on probation. You know what probation is, don't you?

Gracie—Sure. It's two weeks in the country every summer.

George—No, you don't understand. I'm on my good behavior.

Gracie—Even if it was good, Georgie, I wouldn't like it.

George—I've got to report to a probation officer on everything I do.

Gracie—That's simple, just ask him to write me.

George (impatient)—Gracie, you don't understand. You just don't think fast.

Gracie—Do you think fast?

George—Of course I think fast?

Gracie—Not when you're buying imported jewelry, George.

George—Don't heckle me, Gracie.

Gracie—Listen, Georgie, you haven't explained to me yet what you went to New York for the other day.

George—I went there on business. It was an $8,000 business.

George—Did I get what?

Gracie—The $8,000.

Georgie—I got it, in a way.

Gracie—Well, let me have half of it.

George—Listen. I'm paying the $8,000, not collecting it.

Gracie—Oh, then, you didn't win a sweepstakes.

George—Now, listen, stupid.

Gracie (interrupting)—The time when you could call me the stupid member of this team is past.

George—I'll try to explain it. It was a Government matter. I had a little trouble and I had to give up $8,000.

Gracie—Did they give you gas or morphine?

George—I had to take it straight. What are you laughing at?

Gracie—The whole idea of you giving anybody $8,000. I'm your wife and I ought to know.

George—It was a fine. I was fined 8,000 bucks.

Gracie—It's an outrage. Your jokes were never that bad.

George—I wasn't fined for my jokes.

Gracie—Oh, they weren't listening, eh?

George—I was fined for smuggling. You know what it is to smuggle, don't you?

Gracie—It's what we did when we were courting. It's like necking.

George—It has nothing to do with necking. Why would I have to pay $8,000 for necking?

Gracie—For your kind of necking you should be fined $8,000. You're getting off cheap.

George—Gracie, please . . . Smuggling is being mixed up in nonpayment of duties on goods brought in from Europe.

Gracie—Oh, goody, goody!

Gracie—It puts us right up with Jack Benny in publicity. That's worth $8,000. Don't give it another thought.

George—But I nearly got a year in jail.

Gracie—Why didn't you phone me?

George—Why should I have phoned you?

Gracie Could Have Fixed It

Gracie—I could have it fixed so you would have got it.

George—Don't you know how serious it is to nearly get a year in jail?

Gracie—Well, if you nearly got a year in jail I'd nearly have to visit you, and you'd nearly expect me every day and we'd nearly have trouble.

George—Don't you know, Gracie, that in jail the food is terrible?

Gracie—But I'd nearly bring you a lot of nice things.

George—But I would be so lonesome nearly being in jail.

Gracie—No, you wouldn't. There are thousands of people nearly in jail, and they'd be good company. Say, who guards people nearly in jail?

George—A lot of fellows who are nearly sheriffs.

Gracie—I had a brother who was nearly in jail, but he escaped.

George—How?

Gracie—By the help of two men who were nearly lawyers. (There is a knock on the door.)

George (alarmed)—It's the probation officer! What'll I do?

Aviation Film Wins Approval At the Earle

'Wings of the Navy' Stars George Brent With De Havilland; Manon Hit on Stage

"WINGS OF THE NAVY." Warner Brothers' picturization of an original screen play by Michael Fessier, with George Brent, Olivia de Havilland, John Payne, Frank McHugh, John Litel, Victor Jory, Henry O'Neill, John Ridgely, John Gallaudet, Donald Briggs, Regis Toomey, Jonathan Hale, Max Hoffman, Allen Davis, Albert Morin and Larry Williams. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Earle Theater.

"Wings of the Navy" is at its best when, in its latter reels, it depicts the great clipper ships of the air and the chunky sky-scrappers that we have been hearing about in the Presidential plan to strengthen our air fleet. However, its plot structure, particularly in the early reels, might condemn it to be sub-titled, "The Rover Boys at Pensacola."

For the new film at the Earle gallantly shows the forces on which our land is learning more and more to depend, but in picturing the early training of our airmen, it bogs down on the familiar shoals of triteness. Had nearly 30 minutes been clipped from its running time—the film is an hour and a half long—it would have gained immeasurably in pace and interest.

Big brother aviator, George Brent, doesn't want young brother, John Payne, to leave the submarine corps for the aviation branch. Their father was a noted flier and both the brothers seek to uphold the family name in service to the "Wings." So Payne joins the aviation squadron. We follow him and his fellow rookies through the base at Pensacola where just about everything that has ever happened in any aviation film happens to our unknowing friends. Frank McHugh arrives and addresses officer Brent as "boy." When one of the lads flunks out for some reason he moans: "And I promised my girl I'd give her my wings." On an early control flight one of the fellows becomes yellow with terror and cracks up, not only himself, but Brent.

Romance on Shoals

Olivia de Havilland, having waved good-bye to the brothers at a distance which required the boys to make an interminable train ride to reach Florida, now bobs up without so much as a "Well-here-I-am!" George loves Olivia and thinks she loves him. John loves Olivia and knows she loves him. The only way out would seem to be death, though for whom is the big plot trouble. It dribbles on wooden-like, until noble George sees the light and another alternative.

However, as a sort of Job's reward, there are some striking shots of squadrons skimming through the clouds, great new ships being tested and some elegant photography by Cameraman Arthur Edeson. The work which the unsong must go through so that lauded pilots may make triumphal flights in brilliant new ships is dramatized in a gripping scene which tests the grounded Brent's new plane design. The sturdy little plane must be taken as high as the altimeter will go, and then the pilot must dash it quickly earthward, fighting the tremendous pressure of the wind and righting it at just the proper moment to avoid the onrushing earth. The two times this occurs makes the most gripping moments in the film, which was made, incidentally, with co-operation of the United States Navy.

Birthday Ball Visitor George Brent gives as noble a portrayal as his none too lifelike role will permit. Miss de Havilland is as beautiful as ever, but is likewise restrained by her conventional part. John Payne is likeable as the rebelling younger brother, bringing an uncommonly convincing realism to his terrified scene as test pilot for the ship his brother has designed.

It was good to see Victor Jory in a small but welcome part and a new face to this reviewer was Albert Morin, as the Brazilian aviation cadet, a part apparently designed to show the growing co-operation of the American republics. Frank McHugh handles the not so air-conditioned comedy situations.

Sylvia Manon Tops Stage

In her familiar, but apparently never tiring, tossing-abouts, Sylvia Manon was to this reviewer the most enjoyable of the stage performers. No more than a mite of a blonde, Miss Manon is effortlessly tossed hither and yon by her three husky boy-friends and even if you have seen her do it before, you will feet that there is certainly nothing stale about her easy, almost careless, vertiginous whirligigs!

The Rio Brothers' slow-motion fun with what will happen when television finally gets down to being practical, was definitely enjoyed by yesterday afternoon's first house and the Novelle Brothers, on earlier, were genuinely entertaining in their bird-chirping courtship which they introduced in the Alice Faye musical, "You're a Sweetheart." The Roxyettes do some colorful routines, not so ingenious as usual, having no stilts or large globes with which to amaze the customers. Sally and her dog also are on the Earle stage as well as "The Find of the Month," Yola Gali, who sings.

As an extra special flash there are two noteworthy and grippingly real clips in the Paramount News. One is on the dreadful earthquake in Chile and the other the tragic fall of Barcelona with the Spanish refugees pathetically seeking safety at the French border.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

'Honolulu,' at Loew's Capitol, Is Dedicated to Frivolous Enjoyment

Eleanor Powell Still Queen of the Dance; Burns and Allen Score; Stage Bill a Hit

"HONOLULU." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a screen play by Herbert Fields and Frank Partos, with musical numbers by Harry Warren and Gus Kahn, co-starring Eleanor Powell and Robert Young, with George Burns and Gracie Allen, Rita Johnson, Clarence Kolb, Jo Ann Sayers, Willie Fung, Eddie Anderson and many others. Directed by Eddie Buzzell. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

Here is a picture obviously made for the sole purpose of affording the maximum of carefree and enlivening entertainment. It fulfills its function with fine gusto—thanks to the ebullient performances of Eleanor Powell, Robert Young, George Burns, Gracie Allen and numerous others cast in the roles of prime importance.

BELL

Earlier in the week, when Miss Powell was a visiting star in Washington, adding the gayety of her personality to the President's Birthday Celebrations, she confided to this department that "Honolulu" was merely "a lot of fun." I construed her remarks to mean that "a lot of fun" had been experienced by the members of the cast in making the picture. That enjoyment must be shared by all audiences who view the film. "Honolulu" is a buoyant, vivacious and thoroughly amusing adventure in the time-honored field of mistaken identity and romantic involvements.

In the earlier sequences of the action, things center pretty decisively in Robert Young. Mr. Young, in this subject, has the double task of impersonating a dual role. He is first a star of the screen, known by the name of Brooks Mason, trapped by a series of personal appearances. He then exchanges his identity with that of George Smith, a young man who looks exactly like him and finds himself implicated in polished procedures in the insular city from which the film derives its title. These include romantic duplicities, a vast number of pineapples, musical interpolatons that are introduced with more than ordinary logic and a continuously exhilarating flow of comedy that springs from both the lines spoken by the pivotal characters and the situations in which they find themselves involved.

Powell's Dances Excel

One of "Honolulu's" fundamental claims to public attention, of course, is the dancing contributed to its sprightliness by Eleanor Powell. Miss Powell here reveals greater versatility than she has betrayed in many of her earlier vehicles. She not only portrays the leading feminine role in the comedy with fine poise and unfailing charm but gives variation to her terpsichorean artistry by executing a "hula" that might surprise the Polynesians but will add luster to her name among the Americans living on the mainland. Her incomparable "tap" routines are not repetitions of her previous dancing feats on the screen, but demonstrate an originality and creative gift that place Miss Powell definitely and conclusively at the head of the long list of dancing comediennes who lend their talents to the cinema.

George Burns and Gracie Allen are a tower of strength to the picture's decided lean toward stimulating comedy. There are lines in their parts that acquire additional potency by reason of Mr. Burn's unfortunate recent jousts with the customs officials. Miss Allen, with her hair done high and garbed in costumes that are the last word in fashionable swank, becomes almost the American Beatrice Lillie in this most recent of her appearances before the cameras and microphones. She was greatly admired by yesterday afternoon's audiences at Loew's Capitol.

So were Rita Johnson, Jo Ann Sayers and the numerous others in the cast. Among the supporting players, Clarence Kolb again made clear the reason for the favor in which he is held by the Hollywood casting offices when a crotchety man of affairs is needed for an important screen assignment. He almost duplicates in "Honolulu" the inspiriting performance he added to the fine gallery of characterizations that made notable the same company's production of "Merrily We Live."

Star-Studded Stage Bill

The stage bill at the Capitol this week is devoid of prancing "line girls," but atones for a seeming lack of feminine pulchritude by supplying a long list of specialists who do yeomen's service in their wholehearted efforts to bowl the customers right out of their seats. This herculean feat was practically achieved yesterday by Blue Barron and his orchestra, Bobby Pinkus and Ruth Foster, Jerry Mann, the Three Drews and the Knight sisters.

Mr. Barron's orchestra is a skillful organization, both instrumentally and vocally. Its work is marked by astonishing versatility. "Tiny" Wolf—all 300 pounds of him—Russ Carlisle and the others who took their turns at the "mike" never once let the audience down. Bobby Pinkus should receive a medal for the ardency of his comicalities. Mr. Pinkus does everything but kill himself in a comic period that has seldom been equaled for sustained and appreciated effort. Although he caused a "stage wait" of seemingly interminable length yesterday afternoon, Jerry Mann, once he got on stage, proved a monologist-singer-impersonator of the first rank, whose delinquency was soon forgiven. The three Drews, two boys, and a girl, are close harmonists at a piano and the Knight Sisters execute acrobatic and gymnastic routines that are distinctly out of the ordinary, even for two such robust young women.

The Fox Movietone News and Phil Lampkin's orchestral contributions round out a bill that will tickle those who attend the theater for no more profound purpose than to be pleasantly titillated.

Matter of Taste

Jerry Colonna likes ice cream and cake for breakfast and often eats hot cakes and sirup as a dessert to top off his dinner.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 3.—Did my eyes pop when, as I was driving down Santa Monica boulevard, on my way to market, I saw standing in line at the State unemployment insurance offices one of our most prominent young actresses, accompanied, as usual, by her mother.

HEDDA HOPPER

I happen to know that this youngster makes at least $50,000 a year, and wondered why she should be spending that much time to collect the $15 a week the State pays anyone out of work more than four weeks. She's on a 40-week contract at a major studio and is "out of work" three months a year.

I called up Clark Doolittle, of the unemployment office, and he said such goings-on were not uncommon. Many persons reporting earnings of $25,000 a year and up call for their unemployment checks.

"It's just a game with some of them," said Doolittle, and he didn't blame anybody who had to give 1 per cent of his earnings to the State. "You'd collect fire insurance, wouldn't you?" he asked. "Well, it's the same thing." Anybody making $50,000 a year has to pay $500 a year unemployment insurance, but the most you can get back is $300.

Sometimes it's their families, not the stars, who "go Hollywood." Take the case of little Tommy Kelly, the 12-year-old from the Bronx whom David O. Selznick "discovered" and boosted to overnight stardom. At 12, Tommy is washed up at that studio. His contract wasn't renewed. Tommy's father, Michael Aloysious Kelly, an unemployed sexton, on relief when his son was catapulted to stardom, brought mama and four children here. Naturally, they splurged on a big car, a son entered college, and now it looks like Pa Kelly is headed back to relief.

I'm rapidly becoming a snooper. Stopped by the mimeograph department at Warner Bros.' and noticed that Ann Sheridan had a conspicuous place among the new stars. From a beauty contest winner in Dallas to Hollywood stardom in six years isn't bad. But beauty didn't handicap Ann—she's learned to act.

A new romance has gripped the town. It's none other than Martin Goodrider, 13-year-old Blackfoot Indian boy, and Shirley Temple. I hope when he returns to that reservation, he won't try to take her with him. She's so impressed with his horsemanship and new tricks that she's learning them just as fast as she can.

And some of our glamour boys could take lessons from Gene Markey. One night he gives a birthday dinner to our beautiful chatterbox, Barbara Trippett. The next two he's hand-holding with Hedy Lamarr and, in between, acts as escort for his ex-wife, Joan Bennett. I wonder if he remembers the time when he was Ina Claire's shadow. But he's a swell guy, and they're all lucky.

Incidentally, Hedy is the only one of our stars who punches the time clock just the same as the carpenters, painters, or any of the other workers in the studio. No, she doesn't get a thousand a week!

You write a song about "Two Sleepy People" and what do you get? A free Frigidaire! I did a snip about Claudette Colbert posing for Spearmint—they've kept me supplied ever since. I'm now raving about my new Mercury, because it runs like it sounds, and it's gone 135 miles on half a tank of gas. Yes; hope springs eternal in the human breast!

Too bad Betty Compton wasn't mentioned for the role of Belle Watling in "Gone"—she would have been terrific.

Of all things—now we have singing press agents. Yes, sir; Don Ameche's one in Sonja Henie's next, "When Winter Comes." And none other than our beloved Irving Berlin has written the tunes. You can't beat that Sonja. Now that she's cleaned up everywhere with her skating act, she's hopped off to win the South Americans. Which should be a push-over for her, and she didn't take her skates.

George Seaton, who wrote the Marx Brothers pictures at Metro, and is the husband of that grand coach, Phyllis Lawton, is having his play, "Sunset Touch," produced in New York with Minnie Dupree starred. It has a touch of "Outward Bound" and "On Borrowed Time" and is beautifully written. But here he is known as a gagster.

And there's Dean Jagger, who sat around two years at Paramount and six months more at Metro. He is now going into a Theater Guild play in New York. After proving his worth in "Missouri Legend" his name went up in lights. Now Hollywood is paging him again.

And Sophie Tucker, whom we didn't seem to be able to cast, has taken New York by storm. She is showing Hollywood visitors the big town, and believe me, no one could do it better.

Elsa Siegel, German actress who worked with Max Reinhardt, wasn't able to get a job here—so landed in the wardrobe department at Warners' and went to night school to remove her accent. But when Anatole Litvak, attending a fitting preparatory to shooting "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," saw and heard her, he decided she was the right person for an important character part. "Only," he told her, "you'll have to have a heavier accent."

Junior League 'Follies' Scores

It was a gay charade which the Junior Leaguers, their numerous lads and an assortment of 4 or 5 automobiles performed last night in the Belasco Theater before a large and gala audience headed by Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

As for their "Follies of 1939," it is a revue in 19 scenes with some skits that may seem familiar, a fashion show that, to these untutored eyes, is a forerunner of what Paris should, at least, be wearing and several performers who were downright good.

Obviously, much work has gone into this "Follies." The chorus works enthusiastically and one feels confident that they had as much fun with their routines as the audience. Naturally, however, it was the more experienced performers who brought the genuine applause from the house. Anne Simpson is a dark-haired, young woman who handles her castenets with such surety because she has studied for long years, notably as a pupil of the late, great La Argentina. A New Yorker, she made it clear that this was not a new experience for her. Junia Culbertson, heard locally as Yum Yum last season, exhibited a fluid soprano and an assured stage presence.

"If Men Played Cards as Women Do" was expertly handled by Julien Greene, James Marsh, Howard Huen and Carl Hanson, jr. "Jim Dandy" was a Gay Nineties number introduced by Charles D. Hayes with an old Studebaker and Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin evincing many howls. "Tiller, Foster, Hoffman, Hale and Albertina Rasch" was a "line" number relating the trials of the dancers' local counterparts. "Don't Sit Out the Waltz" and "Bouncing the Bubble" were smoothly done group numbers. Robert Whitman did a neat version of Robert Benchley's "Treasurer's Report."

Space forbids further remarks except to say that if you happen to know someone who knows someone in the "Follies' you might have an amusing time this afternoon or evening.

Beery, Taylor Fight It Out At Columbia

'Stand Up and Fight' Opens Repeat Showing On F Street

If you like your fights fast and tough, punctuated with plenty of bloody noses and swollen jaws, then never miss "Stand Up and Fight" which has gone into its second downtown engagement at the Columbia.

Besides being a picture crammed full of the smoke and fury of physical combat, and an impressionistic rendition of 1844 United States, with the battle between stage coach and steam in full progress, and the rumblings of the Civil War already heard in the distance, "Stand Up and Fight" has a more important angle for movie fans. It marks the second appearance of Robert Taylor as a hard guy instead of a Romeo.

The new Robert Taylor is just as likeable as ever, plus a new-sharpness and drive. His role gives him an opportunity to bridge the transition between his new and former metiers. He's first a carefree young plantation ower, a bit too much given to gallantry, bourbon and fox hunting. Even when the family estates have to be auctioned off, he refuses to come down to earth, plans to solve the necessary problem of employment by obtaining a sinecure suitable to his gentlemanly talents.

Philosophy Comes Cropper

But this easy-going philosophy inevitably comes a cropper. A card-playing session and culminating shindig finds young Marster Taylor in the lock-up of a mountain town. His fine is paid by Wallace Beery, but not from philanthropic motives. Wally is the head man of a stage coach company and has a racket whereby he gets out jailbirds for a few dollars and makes them work out their sentences as mule-skinners for his concern. Did we say that the owner of the stage coach line is a lovely Yankee, Florence Rice, whom Robert knows from his social days?

Naturally, Cap'n Beery cares less than nothing for Robert's 'ristocratic airs, slaps him chilly when he talks back. Robert seethes with inward fury and begins to understand he's really in love with the little Yankee dollar princess.

Here the story take a double-twist with the entrance of a pre-Civil War crime racket—the ethical smuggling of slaves to freedom, except that the luckless slaves were sold back down the river instead of being smuggled. Cap'n Beery is in on the first half of the racket as a profitable sideline to the stage coach business. The climax explodes when Robert discovers a former slave of his own in the clutches of the gang and exposes Beery, who is nearly lynched by outraged Virginians. Big scene of the picture is when the fugitive Beery meets Robert in a snowstorm and they fight to a finish and are both nearly frozen to death before a posse finds them.

Beery at His Best

Beery is at his best in "Stand Up and Fight." He has full play for that combination of fighter-coward-bully, smeared with humor and hypocrisy, that only he can do. Charles Bickford, with less opportunity, plays with almost equal force as the leader of the slave-smuggling-selling gang. Florence Rice makes a pretty love interest and Helen Broderick contributes her typical humor.

Lew Lehr's newest short, "Academy for Inventors," produces even more laughs with a flock of accomplices than in his newsreel specialties. There's a cartoon comedy circling around a boxing match. The newsreel shows the Coast Guard breaking up the Hudson ice, also a doleful procession of captured Spanish loyalists whom, we hope, are happier now than when they were filmed.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Feb. 3.

THOMAS E. DEWEY: Within the next two weeks the State Federation of Labor will ask the Legislature to enact a statute which would forbid the use of evidence obtained by wire tapping. If you want A. F. of L. support in your next campaign this will put you on the spot—because, until now, you've opposed such legislaiton . . . Katherine Cornell: Your husband, Guthrie McClintic, has been engaged to write the foreword to your autobiography, "I Wanted to Be an Actress" . . .

BARTENDERS UNION: That ballroom dancer who entertains at the Cafe Latino, on week-ends, is a bartender there, during the rest of the week . . . Newspaper Guild: Amster Spiro, the former city editor, is becoming a book publisher. His first publication will be his own book.

WILLIAM GAXTON: The elevator operator who works at the Friars Club was consoled with: "Comes the revolution, the Friars will run the elevator, and you'll be a Friar" . . . "Naw," he replied, "I wanna be a member of the Lambs" . . . Alexander Woollcott: The Connecticut Nutmeg, about to employ your niece, Joan Woollcott, sent a scout to Swarthmore, where she's studying. The scout reported that she was satisfactory. The report read: "Great writer—weak on spelling." She was hired . . . Broadway Association: The Little Club, on West Fifty-second street, also closed this week—making it the third cafe casualty this week. Two partners were lamenting this ill-fortune yesterday and one sighed: "It only seems like yesterday that we opened here" . . . "Wake up," the other partner snapped. "It was."

ALBERT EINSTEIN: The physics department of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology is now conducting a series of experiments in smashing the atom by means of a newly invented Van de Graf cyclotron . . . These M. I. T. professors, who have a reputation of being the most serious minded in the world, last week placed a framed cartoon on their laboratory wall. It's an original drawing of Gregory D'Alessio's cartoon which appears in the current issue of the American Magazine. It shows a young, dumb assistant in a laboratory, carrying an ax in his hands, and announcing that he's about to undertake the splitting of an atom. And his superior, hovering nearby, is cautioning—that such an operation calls for a more subtle approach.

MUSICIANS UNION: Bert Lown, the former bandleader who became a booking agent, will resume as an orchestra conductor. He'll use his original theme song, "Bye, Bye, Blues" . . . Tommy Dorsey: You'll be battling your brother, Jimmy, again. Jimmy will appear at the Strand Theater, starting March 25, and you're scheduled to open at the rival Paramount one week later . . . Dwight Wiman: You shouldn't have any billing trouble with Jimmy Durante in your new show. When Jimmy first played the Palace, he waited across the street until dark, to see how his name looked in lights . . . When darkness shadowed the Broadway skies and Durante saw his name in lights for the first time, he was asked how it felt. "Hell," he confessed. "No different."

MAYOR LaGUARDIA: When the fair opens, Harry Hershfield never will accompany Grover Whalen on the auto ride to and from the Fair Grounds. When Whalen was police commissioner, Harry accompanied him back from a ball game. A police escort, with sirens blowing, sped them home at 70 miles an hour. Don't worry," Whalen assured. "Everybody knows I'm in this car" . . . "Yeah," Hershfield returned, "but slow up—so they can see who's with you" . . . Arthur Murray: Gertrude Niesen, one of America's foremost singers, and now at the Versailles, will instruct the Art Students League—in how to do the Conga . . . Frank Fay: Elsie Janis signed that contract with you because you said, "Elsie, I need you." Others had offered her $3,500 a week.

JOHN GARFIELD: Horace MacMahon, who appeared in almost 40 pictures last year, is somewhat amazed at your rapid rise to stardom. This is MacMahon's idea of show business: "You run around to 30 booking agencies the first year, and finally get a part in a show. You'll have one line to say: 'Here's your letter, George' . . . Next year you'll do the same thing and again wind up with a one-line role: "Here's your letter, George' . . . The third year you'll repeat and still say, 'Here's your letter, George' . . . Then, after three years, if you're lucky—you're George."

MeanDriversDelay Rhumba Number

If California motorists are gallant, then they are cautious to a painful degree, Ann Sheridan decided.

En route home from the studio 'late one night she ran out of gas. Gas stations were closed so she began to walk the several miles home.

Finally a blister started raising on her heel and in desperation she attempted to thumb a ride from the infrequently passing motorists. Not a driver would stop. Completely exhausted, she arrived home and treated the blistered heel.

When she reported to work on "The Professor Steps Out" set, the shooting schedule, which had specified she was to dance a rhumba with Dick Powell, had to be rearranged so she could film "sitting" scenes.

Football Tactics

Ronald Colman has finally made use of the football tactics he learned in college. A scene in "Smashing the Money Ring," second in the new Warner Secret Service series, called for him to twist and dodge his way through an army of Mexicans without being caught—which he did successfully in one take.

Your Figure, Madame!

Claire Trevor, Film Star, Says Happiness Develops Beauty

Lack of Worry Lets One Relax, Movie Star Explains

By Ida Jean Kain

HAVEN'T you sometimes wondered whether the girls who enact the tough roles are really so tough, and if those who carry the sugary parts are sweet offscreen? Claire Trevor plays the hardboiled dames of screen and radio so convincingly that it was a delightful surprise to find her as friendly and natural as one of the girls in the afternoon bridge club.

And, before we got down to the statistics about how she keeps her beautiful figure, Miss Trevor confided she would like the chance to play a nice girl for a change!

Claire Trevor hasn't any beauty secrets, but she believes happiness counts for more than all the beauty formulas lumped together. She has the theory that when you are happy you do not worry, and not worrying lets you relax. "Everything seems to go better when you're happy," she added.

Exercise Aids Happiness

Of course, just plain happiness would not keep her waistline trimmed down to 25 inches. It takes exercise to have such a small waist, with hips 35 inches, bust 35½ inches, and to keep your weight at 112 pounds for a height of five-feet-three. Miss Trevor prefers to take her exercise in outdoor activities like tennis, swimming, walking, and, occasionally fishing.

Even as you and I, however, she has a few specific exercises on which to fall back when pressed for time or when lacking the opportunity for outdoor sports. Here are two you may like to borrow for slimming your own measurements . . .

Stand with the right arm stretched straight out in front, the left arm as straight as possible in back. Kick the left toes to the right hand, keeping the arm shoulder level and bringing the foot up. Swiftly reverse the position of the arm, and kick with the right foot, touching the left hand.

Stand with the back to a table, hips braced solidly against its edge. Clasp hands back of the head and twist at the waist from one side to the other. Bracing the hips against the table will enable you to concentrate the exercise on the waistline where it is needed.

Eats Vegetables For Fun

Miss Trevor doesn't "diet" but she eats her vegetables so she can have fun—which is a highly original reason! She says she likes to feel "full of health" because then she gets more enjoyment out of work and play and when you're tired you can't enjoy anything. "I find that eating vegetables and drinking milk keep me fit. I never used to pay much attention to correct eating, but I have found how necessary it is," the young star told me.

Talk about dieting is dying out in Hollywood, it seems. The stars are eating sensibly not only because they need the energy for their work, but because glamour and anemia don't go together. For the most part, Hollywood's beauty secrets are: the right food for reasons mentioned, exercise to keep the measurements trim, and enough rest and relaxation to stay lovely. Taken together, they form a program any woman can follow to the advantage of her looks.

Herald of next summer's swim suits is the figure flattering model above of elasticized satin. It has a built-in uplift which transforms a negligible outline into a figure eight. An abstract zebra pattern aids this optical illusion. The suit, which is characteristic of those being shown for resort wear, is modeled by Patricia Ellis, movie actress

Women Make Strides In Gas Industry

A fact brought to light recently by Miss Jessie McQueen, home service counsellor of the American Gas Association, indicates the strides women have made in the vast gas industry. Within the last ten years the number of gas companies utilizing home service alone has increased from 200 to 500, and home service personnel has increased from 250 to 1,200.

As a rough estimate, assuming there are fully 20 other women employed in various capacities to each home economist—approximately 24,000 women are engaged actively in the gas industry, as there are additional opportunities for service as saleswomen, secretaries, stenographers, comptometer operators, cashiers, bookkeepers and clerks.

Charity Singing Always the Same Old Story

Draughts, Piano Out of Tune, Buzzing Audience Amateur's Plaints

By Malvina Lindsay

You are never going to sing again—for charity. It is always the same old story, a draughty room, piano out of tune, a buzzing audience—wait, there's the telephone. Well, if its anybody who wants you to sing, it's just too bad . . .

It is Mrs. Powers. The League for the Broader Life is holding a dinner to awaken interest in the plight of neutrals in the next war. It is an important affair, with a speaker from Southern Rhodesia, the mayor, a six-course dinner, and—will you sing? . . . You won't! . . . Still, it's such a worthy cause . . . and you will get to hear the very interesting speaking program . . . and they are going to have a very lovely dinner, and, of course, they want you to be their guest . . . and, well, you are really the outstanding vocal artist of the town and if you don't everybody will be so disappointed . . . .

You point out that there would be the problem of an accompanist and rehearsal . . . Oh, well, you won't need any rehearsal. You can just sing some simple number that you already know, and as for the accompanist, there's a little woman in the club who can play beautifully. And, of course, they'll see that the piano is in tune . . . oh, they'll just do anything because they do want all the distinguished visitors to hear your voice, as the club and the town are so proud of you, and—

Oh, well, you'll sing!

You have your best evening dress cleaned (Mrs. Powers said they wanted you to look your prettiest) also your white kid gloves and satin slippers. You get a wave set and manicure, hire your own cab and arrive at the banquet hall.

You talk your way past the doorkeeper who demands your ticket, and finally are taken in tow by Mrs. Powers. You ask about the piano. "We meant to see if it was in tune," she explains, "but there were so many things at the last minute. You know how it is . . ."

You sit at the far end of the speakers' table next an elderly member who is hard of hearing and the assistant corresponding secretary of the league, who is chatty. You nibble at your food, shout yourself husky, pray that you won't be stifled by cigarette smoke. As the waiters are bringing on the dessert, Mrs. Powers rises. The time is getting short, she explains, and the musical program will begin. She introduces you. The guests turn reluctantly from their chocolate frappes to applaud politely. The little lady from the club with whom you have rehearsed once takes her place at the piano. You clear your husky throat and—sing.

Struggling bravely against the competition of rattling dishes and whispers of conversation, against a piano out of tune, you complete your song. The audience, having completed its frappes, demands an encore. This you give as the waiters are removing the dishes.

Through the demi-tasses you give another encore. The audience listens attentively. You notice especially a large bosomed dowager in a form-fitting silver lame gown leaning forward rapturously. Suddenly you feel happier. Maybe you are getting across after all.

Back at your seat you find there is no way to escape the rest of the program. The door is across the hall and Mrs. Powers is introducing the speaker.

On adjournment, you find many pressing forward to congratulate you. You turn to them smilingly, expectantly.

"I loved your singing. You have such a strong voice" . . . "Oh, you sang such pretty pieces" . . . "So glad to have heard you. I simply love music" . . . "Oh, you did look so pretty" . . . That's such a lovely dress" . . . "Now when I give a compliment, you may know I mean it. I'm not like some people" . . . "Well, of course, I might do something with my voice, too, if I didn't have children . . ."

The woman in the silver lame who gazed at you so enraptured has reached your side. You turn to her smilingly, trying not to look too avid. "Say, tell me," she asks eagerly, "where on earth did you get that necklace? I'm simply crazy for one just like it."

Chiffons for Evening In Floral Patterns

Paris (AP).—For evening, chiffons are splashy, large floral designs on light grounds. Some of the smaller motifs for crepes and chiffons include mixed pastel colored patterns in which soap bubbles, children's balloons, butterflies and parasols, figure. In printed beach stuffs, strong colors prevail. Hard pinks show up in shells; emerald mermaids float in strong blue seas.

Spotty patterns include a black crepe de chine, with a coin spot of of vivid orange centered with a black anchor. Another black crepe counts up to six, in tiny white figures printed helter skelter.

PATTERN 6268

BE IRRESISTIBLY feminine in a pert toque done in single crochet and rib stitch. The effective pattern stitch is repeated on the purse. You'll love the quilted effect of the stitch. Use three-fold Saxony. Pattern 6268 contains instructions for making set; materials needed; illustration of set and of stitches.

To obtain this pattern send 10 cents in coin to The Washington Post Household Arts Dpeartment, 259 West Fourteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and pattern number.

Feed 'Em Cake, Says Nutritionist

Marie Antoinette of France may have been a poor politician, but she was a good dietitian, Dr. James A. Tobey, New York nutrition authority, stated at the recent cake session of the American Bakers Association in Chicago.

The queen's advice to the starving people to eat cake may have helped to touch off the French Revolution, but it made good dietary sense, declared Dr. Tobey, who said that a populace amply fed on cake "would have no stomach for revolution."

Cake is one of the most nourishing of foods, according to the speaker, who pointed out that eggs, milk, butter and other forms of shortening, sugar and flavors, as well as wheat flour of the highest quality are all used in the making of cake. As a consequence, the cake eater is well provided with necessary foodminerals and vitamins, and also with valuable food energy.

A Woman's New York

Gracie Fields, Sailing Home To England, Admits She's Good

by Alice Hughes

New York, Feb. 3.

HERE IN New York there is a group of women who are the queens of the American entertainment world. They shine on the stage, they glitter on the screen, and they give out gloriously on the air. They think they're something—and they are. But for several days we played host to the crowned queen of the amusement business of the Mother Country—Dear Old England, to be precise. She came, she stayed, she went home, and it's dollars to tuppence that few if any of the great American women of the stage and screen know anything about her. We of the audience know less than that.

ALICE HUGHES

She is anything but modest about her feats of entertainment. Her name is Gracie Fields, a Lancashire Lass, and certain surefire in Britain.

"I am the highest paid actress in the world," she will tell an interviewer. "And I'm worth every shilling I earn." Can we call her a liar?

This English wonder has spent 33 years in the theater. "I wasn't so sure of the legitimate theater," says the music hall queen, "so I got a job in a play with Sir Gerald Du Maurier. The critics went wild, and the audiences couldn't get enough. But I was bored saying and doing the same things every night. So I left the legitimate theater."

She doesn't know how it feels to make so much money, because her manager collects it and gives her 56 pounds a week. "I spend it, some on running the house, and some on clothes." Take my word for it, she collects more than the Hollywood wonder girls.

Then Gracie Fields, "the highest paid actress in the world," took the Queen Mary and sailed for home. Gosh—she must be good, all right! Why not, when England loves her as it does! Hams across the sea!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—We've been having a spot of weather here—not climate. When the mercury sinks to 5 above here, we think that's terrible, and suffer accordingly. And when that happens, what do the nassy Fifth avenue stores do? Why, fill their windows with spring clothes—lovely things in navy blue, or bright gay checks in another window, and still another with the effrontery to fill its glass with Toni Frissell's lovely Hawaiian backgrounds and the adapted beach clothes that stem from them. Such gall—when poor anemic Aunt Alice is dying of chilblains! Well, if she doesn't like it, she can head for the equator—but who would kick in with the pay check? No one, obviously, so here I stalk and suffer!

Eve Curie, daughter of the great Mme. Curie and her biographer, is coming to our shores for a brief lecture tour in a few weeks. Something to look forward to, I should imagine . . . That Brenda D. D. D. D. D. Frazier, top deb in all the papers and magazines, has been sitting for her portrait, the artist being Dorothy Vicaji, who has painted European crowned heads and even Brenda's mama. Miss Vacaji says that Brenda is a good sitter, being able to go an hour and a half without fidgeting. Nice nerves, Brenda, old bud!

Mary Haworth's Mail

Case Cited of Tall, Shy Girl Who Won Nation's Heart And Married One of America's "Handsomest Men"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am interested in what "Self Conscious," your correspondent of January 31, has to say of her reactions to her unusual height. They are understandable enough, but wholly unnecessary—as I, who also am tall, have learned. I think you answered her wisely in advising a course of training in a school for models, because I think such instruction will do much to help her overcome those feelings of awkward self consciousness. Also, she should take up skating, swimming and dancing, as you further recommended.

Now, about this dancing business. Of course, she will find that many desirable partners are shorter than herself, but I learned long ago to put my mind on just one thing when dancing with a shorter man—and that was, take HIS mind off the fact that he IS shorter. That calls forth my keenest wit (if any) and my best conversational line. Or, if he is a very good dancer, it means concentrating upon matching my steps perfectly with his—without any conversation. In the pleasure of perfectly timed dancing, he probably will—usually does—forget all about the height of the girl with whom he is dancing. Then, too, there is always the silver lining in the 6-footers who invariably like to dance with tall girls!

One other point: The tall girl will find herself more attractive and less inclined to self consciousness if she remembers what my own wise little mother told me long ago—"No matter how tall you grow, stand as straight and as tall as you can. Keep your chin up. You'll look less tall, and a lot more graceful."

The tall girl should carry her height with pride, and seek—rather than avoid—the "better class cafes and restaurants." For, if she is beautifully groomed and has a naturally pleasing personality (as this girl obviously has) she will attract only admiring comment. This will bolster the ego which needs a little stiffening. She should think, as she walks down the aisle, that she is exceptionally good looking; not that she is exceptionally tall.

And she might well remember that a very tall, shy young girl in New York, who also thought herself quite plain, held her head high and has walked gracefully not only into the first place in the land, but into a niche occupied by no other woman before her, in the hearts of the thousands of people who know her radiant personality. Eleanor Roosevelt is nearly 6 feet tall herself. She attracted and married one of the handsomest men in America, and is not only one of the most charming, but undoubtedly one of the greatest women the world has produced. TALL GAL.

Tall Girl's Creed

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I would like to direct a few words to "Self Conscious." I, too, am a 6-footer and I love it! Ever since I can remember, I was always the tallest in all my classes at school. (I used to go to the end of a line automatically, without even looking around to see if there might, perhaps, be someone else who had a better right to be there). I remember feeling rather ridiculous in my dancing classes, but I bless those classes now, for having given me what grace and poise I have.

I must admit that being tall has its disadvantages, as well as its advantages. The worst part of it is in trying to buy clothes. I really think manufacturers overlook us entirely, and I dread nothing more than a shopping expedition. However—and don't forget it—no one can wear clothes as well as we can. Another disadvantage is when we are asked to dance with someone shorter than ourselves. If I can, I get out of it. But if I can't, I make the most of it, and never stoop so low as to stoop.

May I say to "Self Conscious," —always stand straight. Wear comfortable, medium heeled shoes, and forget your height. Dress smartly and comfortably. Correct any figure faults. And above all, don't be sorry for yourself. Be proud that you are head and shoulders above the other girls. Best of luck. SIX FOOTER.

Junior League Follies Prove Theatrical and Social Success

All But Five Seats in Belasco Sold; $2,000 Worth of Flowers Delivered Backstage; Many Cave-Dwellers Seen in the Audience

By Dudley Harmon

That Washington Junior Leaguers certainly can can-can, as well as sing, tap and be funny, was demonstrated last night when the Junior League Follies opened before a very large and very smart audience.

Five minutes before the show began all but five seats in the Belasco had been sold, and an estimated $2,000 worth of flowers had already been delivered by various admirers to the girls backstage. Mrs. Robert Whitlaw Wilson, chairman of the Follies and vice president of the league, was pacing the lobby looking as lovely as though she belonged on the stage instead of in the audience. Her dark green crepe evening gown was topped by a mink coat with a spray of yellow orchids on the lapel.

Flashlight bulbs bursting before a box on the right gave proof through the house that Mrs. Roosevelt was there. The First Lady wore a deep blue dinner dress with a white fox wrap and was accompanied by Mayris Chaney, her dancer protege.

Most of Washington society was in the show, but many more turned out to see daughter, wife, husband, son or friend.

Mrs. Stanley Reed, in a wine-colored velvet wrap, arrived just before the curtain went up. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, another spectator, wore a blue brocaded wrap trimmed with fox.

Counting heads in the lobby before the show began was Mrs. John Selby, vice chairman of the Follies. She was in a black gown, fingertip ermine jacket, and a gardenia perched atop her "up" coiffure.

Mrs. Henry L. Roosevelt In Audience

Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt came with her next door neighbor, Mrs. Eldridge Jordan. Both ladies wore long black velvet wraps trimmed with fur. Mrs. David McK. Key, who has just arrived from Ottawa to visit her parents, Gen. and Mrs. William Mason Wright, was to have accompanied them, but at the last moment was prevented.

Mrs. Dean Acheson was accompanied by Mrs. Charles Darlington. Nearby was the former's daughter, Miss Jane Acheson, with a beau. Miss Maisie Howard, Miss Houston Nille and Miss Doris Becker were other members of the younger set present.

Henry Parsons Erwin and Mrs. Delos Blodgett were on hand to see the former's wife, who is also Mrs. Blodgett's daughter, perform in a "Gay Nineties" number. Mr. and Mrs. John Newbold were accompanied by Spottswood White, and another threesome consisted of the Secretary of the Italian Embassy and Count Roberti and Robert Coe.

Anne Simpson, the featured dancer, was so good that many people in the audience thought she was a professional. As a matter of fact, although she has studied in Europe under such exponents of the dance as Argentina, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Simpson, of New York, prefer her to limit her activities to charity shows.

During the entr'acte we heard enthusiastic praise for the voices of Mrs. Carroll Morgan, James Mann, and Junia Culbertson; for Lawrence Baker's dancing—his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Baker, were in the audience; for the charm of Alice Barry, who in the fashion show looked as though she had stepped down from a portrait, dressed in a plaid evening frock with two little bows in her hair and carrying an old-fashioned bouquet; for Mrs. Atherton Macondray's poise, and for many other members of the large cast.

Many Cave-Dwellers, Few Diplomats

Mrs. James Cox, secretary of the league, and Mrs. Bishop Hill, treasurer, greeted each other in the lobby. Others chatting there included George Abell, accompanied by Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, who wore a mink coat over her gown.

Many cave-dwellers, but few diplomats were in last evening's audience. The only ones of the latter we spotted were the Swiss Minister and Mme. Peter, the latter wearing a blue chiffon band around her hair.

Mrs. Phillip Coffin came in with Mrs. Montgomery Blair, jr., who is active in league work and served as chairman of the last horse show. Miss Caroline Nash, who leaves soon for a trip to Mexico with Mrs. McCeney Werlich, looked handsome last evening in an orchid tulle dress and an ermine jacket.

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers wore a plum colored velvet wrap with a little white fur collar. Nearby sat Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, all in black. Others seen included Kemper Simpson, Miss Josephine Rice, Miss Stellita Stapleton, among those handing out programs; Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, and Mrs. Hamilton Byran accompanied by Mrs. Anthony Coleby.

Assisting at the tea tables will be Mrs. Morris Sheppard, Mrs. Charles McNary, Mrs. Warren R. Austin, Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, Mrs. John O'Laughlin, Mrs. Walter L. Reed, Mrs. John L. DeWitt, and Mrs. Julian L. Schley.

F. W. Mondell, Jr., Back in Capital

Frank W. Mondell, jr., son of the former Speaker of the House and Mrs. Frank W. Mondell, returned yesterday from Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Mondell, jr., went there to visit Mrs. Mondell's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Murdock, of Beverly Hills, the day after Christmas. Mrs. Mondell is extending her visit with her parents.

Mr. Mondell will leave Washington tomorrow for Winston-Salem, N. C., and will make a business trip through the South. He will join Mrs. Mondell in California in the early spring and they will motor back to Washington, arriving here around the first of April.

William H. Mondell, elest son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mondell, who left last Tuesday for a brief trip to New York, is returning to his home in Washington today.

Mary Parker Plans Cocktail Party

Miss Mary Parker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Scott Parker, will entertain at a cocktail party tomorrow in honor of Miss Barbara Bolling, daughter of Mrs. Wilmer Bolling.

Miss Bolling with Miss Adele Bunker will sail Wednesday for a visit in Soviet Russia with the Italian envoy to Moscow and Signora Rosso. The latter is Miss Bunker's mother.

R. H. Melpolders To Live Here

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hannis Melpolder, who were married on Thursday morning, will reside at 2808 Cathedral avenue on their return from a wedding trip.

The bride is the former Miss Margery Griesbauer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Andrew Griesbauer, and Mr. Melpolder is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Melpolder. Their marriage took place in the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, the Rev. Thomas G. Smyth afficiating.

Mr. Griesbauer gave his daughter in marriage. She wore a gown of white lace over satin and carried a prayer book covered with gardenias and with a marker of lilies of the valley.

Miss Barbara Griesbauer was maid of honor for her sister, wearing a blue net frock and lace jacket. Her hat matched her gown and she carried a bouquet of spring flowers tied with pink ribbon. The bridesmaids were Miss Jane Ann Griesbauer, another sister, and Miss Marjorie Abbott, of Falls Church, Va. They wore pink net gowns with jackets and hats to match and carried spring flowers.

Hatches Vacationing At Ormond Beach, Fla.

Self-Help Exchange Inspected by Group

Organization Assured of Contributions After Members of D. C. Voteless League Of Women Voters Tour Building

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Contributions of old clothing, firewood and of enthusiastic interest in the work of the Self-Help Exchange, promise to be the result of a visit there yesterday by a group of new members of the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters. They went under the leadership of Mrs. Henry Chalmers, chairman of orientation, and were greeted by Mrs. David Cushman Coyle, an active member of the league and also a member of the board of directors of the exchange.

The trip was part of the plan of the orientation committee for giving new league members opportunity to acquaint themselves with community agencies and problems before indicating in which branch of league work they desire to enroll.

The women started their tour of inspection in the office of Miss Louise Beall, field secretary, where they were shown a case full of articles made by the workers. There were crocheted handbags, children's dresses, men's shirts, crocheted rugs, pillows, baskets, brooms and innumerable other useful articles. All of these, it was explained, were for sale at the "store" for scrip.

The three-story building, 2529 Pennsylvania avenue, has but one room devoted to the store. The other rooms accommodate the production units in the co-operative plan.

People Eager for Chance to Work

In the basement are the kitchen and dining room. The women had luncheon together there, preceded by an informal talk by Mrs. Coyle. The exchange, she said, makes use of both time and materials which otherwise would go to waste and offers conclusive proof that, people do want to work.

"Last year," she said, "we cared for 1,300 people and were obliged, for lack of space, to turn away 1,800 who wanted to work. There are now about 300 working daily. Every day is pay day in scrip. The participants in the exchange give 20 hours as a deposit and guarantee of good faith, and then are paid at the rate of one piece of scrip for one hour of work. They gain skill, have companionship, a normal routine, the feeling of belonging to something which is a part of the community life and whereby they can supply at least part of their needs."

One piece of scrip pays for a well-cooked, substantial meal, and two meals a day are served there. Four pieces, or four hours' work, buys a shirt such as would sell for $1.50 in money. There is no competition with the stores, Mrs. Coyle pointed out, for money will not buy things at the exchange.

Workers are encouraged to take other jobs wherever available, but have a sense of security in the knowledge that, if they need to return to the exchange, they may do so.

They have formed a club which meets monthly at St. John's Parish hall. There they give entertainments which have revealed surprising talent, she says. They have also a welfare fund of 40 pieces of scrip which they contributed to loan to members in an emergency.

The league members, following luncheon were taken to the various departments of the exchange. At the beauty parlor, where a woman in need of work may have her hair shampooed and her nails manicured to present a neat appearance. There is a barber shop where the men use their scrip to pay for a haircut and a shave. There is the bakery, which produces 839 loaves of bread daily and is being enlarged to a capacity of 1,200 loaves. The bakers showed their fresh bread with pride. One piece of scrip buys three loaves.

Second-hand shoes are repaired in the shoe shop after they are purchased.

Old garments were being repaired and new ones made from contributed materials in the sewing rooms. Scraps of material were being made into quilts by other workers, and, in another room, a white-haired man was reupholstering an old chair.

Add More Units To Increase Work

An old garage in Snows Court has been converted into a carpenter shop, where furniture is repaired, said Mrs. Coyle. A second building also was opened the first of January, at 1428 U street. There a beauty shop, print shop, laundry, cafeteria and sewing room are in operation, and it is planned soon to make soap there also.

A farm near Kensington, given to the exchange a year ago, supplied $1,000 worth of vegetables, as well as quantities of broom corn. A young man making brooms, by the way, went to the city dump early each morning to salvage broom handles.

The men working on the farm had opportunity to earn money by working for neighboring farmers, and five now have steady employment.

Mrs. Coyle told many interesting stories of persons whose morale had been restored by the exchange and who have found regular work. One man, who came there utterly discouraged, when he was able to get clothes, a haircut and shave, and to earn food, took new spirit and shortly found a $3,000 job.

Arts Club to Give 3-Act Comedy by Ednah P. Clarke

On February 21, 22 and 23 the Arts Club will give its third drama of the season, an original three-act comedy by Ednah Proctor Clarke.

The author wrote the introduction used at the dedication in 1929, of the Arts Club stage, on which her play will be given. Another of her plays produced at the club was "The House Cat," awarded first prize in the one-act play tournament of the Community Center several years ago. She also has written scenarios for several of the more memorable Bals Boheme.

Taft, of Ohio; Mrs. Charles W. Tobey, of New Hampshire; Mrs. Tom Stewart, of Tennessee; Mrs. Scott W. Lucas, of Illinois; Mrs. James M. Mead, of New York, and Mrs. Clyde M. Reed, of Kansas.

Among others who have been longer in that circle who will be guests of the club are Mrs. William E. Borah and Mrs. Charles L. McNary, wife of the Minority Leader of the Senate.

Mrs. Cordell Hull, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, Mrs. Gilbert M. Hitchcock and Mrs. Charles M. Lea, all associate members of the club, and Mrs. Edward R. Burke, present president of the Congressional Club, and Mrs. Daninel Reed, past president, will be among those at the tea Monday.

Alternating at the tea table will be Mrs. Bankhead, Mrs. McNary, Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, Mrs. William N. Doak and Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, also associate members of the club.

Mrs. Ned Brunson Harris, head of the Minneapolis Journal Washington Bureau, and president of the club, will receive.

Democrat Women To Give Tea for Wife of Speaker

Mrs. William B. Bankhead, wife of the Speaker, will be guest of honor at a tea to be given by the Woman's National Democratic Club this afternoon from 4:30 to 6 o'clock at club headquarters, 1526 New Hampshire avenue.

Receiving with Mrs. Bankhead and Mrs. Wilbur W. Hubbard, president of the club, will be Representative Caroline O'Day, Representative Mary T. Norton and the wives of two members of Congress from Alabama, who are members of the club, Mrs. Pete Jarman and Mrs. Luther Patrick. Mrs. Edgar Kay will present the guests.

Mrs. George M. Grant, Mrs. Sam Hobbs, Mrs. Joe Starnes, Mrs. John J. Sparkman and Mrs. Frank M. Boykin, wives of members of the Alabama delegation, and Mrs. J. Fred Johnson, Mrs. Travis Williams and Mrs. A. G. Patterson, Alabama women whose husbands are Government officials, will take turns at the tea table.

Mrs. Charles Brand, Mrs. Thomas Sebrill and Mrs. Charles McEnerney, members of the club hospitality committee, will assist.

Mrs. Roosevelt Patroness For Dance Concert

Mrs. Roosevelt heads the list of patronesses for the Washington Dance Association's presentation of the Doris Humphrey-Charles Weidman dance concert group at Roosevelt High School auditorium February 15.

The Humphrey-Weidman dance concert is the third presentation this season of the Washington Dance Association, which was founded last year to increase public interest in the dance as an art.

Mrs. Hilliare Wardwell is chairman for the concert and Miss Evelyn Davis, president, of the Washington Dance Association which has headquarters at 1742 Church street northwest.

True Artist Eschews Contour For Character, Says Werboff

Shortening a nose, or taking lines from a face, is not the way to paint beauty into a portrait. It is necessary to discover lovable qualities in the character of the individual and to portray them. This is the opinion of no less an authority than Michael Werboff, who painted four portraits of King Gustav V of Sweden, the last one of King Alfonso of Spain, before his exile and numbers many others of world figures, including King Carol of Rumania, Tristan Bernard and Paul Boncour.

Mr. Werboff, this week-end, is the guests of Audrey Wurdemann Auslander and her husband, Joseph Auslander, poetry consultant at the Library of Congress. Yesterday he was entertained at the Round Table luncheon in the library at which heads of the various divisions gather informally each day.

In addition to having painted portraits of both Mrs. Auslander,

AUDREY WURDEMANN AUSLANDER

who is president of the National League of American Pen Women, and of Mr. Auslander, the noted portraitist a few years ago turned illustrator for two evenings to do the drawings for Mrs. Auslander's second book, "The Seven Sins." He worked while she read him the poem whose description of seven sons, cursed by their father, and portraying anger, avarice, gluttony and similar characteristics, he considered a challenge to his knowledge of human nature.

Among the pictures he has with him are his drawings of Mr. and Mrs. Auslander. The portrait of Mrs. Auslander is reproduced herewith.

He also has a scrapbook along, something he had never made for himself but which a friend recently assembled for him. Among the pictures therein is a photograph of the artist, standing beside King Gustav, taken at the Swedish Legation in Paris in 1931. There are also snapshots taken at Chateau de Coseme, where he spent a summer as the guest of King Carol.

He speaks with warm affection of King Gustav, who, he says, is "the most lovable person I have ever met." King Gustav's protruding teeth disturbed him when he started to paint his portrait and he made the first sketch with the mouth closed so as not to show them. The next morning, when the King saw it, he told Mr. Werboff it was difficult to pose with his mouth closed, adding he did not mind his teeth showing because he had been caricatured so often that way. After a sitting, the artist frequently played tennis with the Swedish monarch and was accustomed to address him as "Mr. G."

King Carol, he says, knows art and music completely, is a delightful conversationalist, has 1,000 photographs taken all over the world, in places only a member of royalty could go and possesses "the most beautiful hands I have ever seen on a man's body."

Mr. Werboff is here on his return to New York from Hollywood, where he spent the winter. While there he was "conscripted" for the part of a Cossack officer in "Imperial Hotel" and enjoyed his turn in the movies. He is a singer in addition to a portrait artist and at the insistence of his friends, plans to do some concert and radio work.

Among noted Americans whose portraits he has painted are Harold S. Vanderbilt, Frederick W. Rhinelander, Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Louis Wiley, Jesse Isidor Straus, Errol Flynn and other motion picture stars.

He likes all his subjects, he says, and that is the way he discovers what to reveal in their faces.

Wilson Alumnae Told College Must Expand If It Is to Survive

Canham, Christian Science Monitor Chief Here, Says Institution Should Contribute to Making 'Democracy Work'

The liberal arts college must expand its services to the community if it is to survive in the times that are ahead, the Washington Alumnae of Wilson College, Chambersburg, Pa., were told last night by Erwin D. Canham, chief of the Washington Bureau of the Christian Science Monitor. Mr. Canham addressed them at a dinner given in the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women, celebrating the seventieth anniversary of the college.

Speaking on "Democracy and College," he declared the institution the Future of the Liberal Arts tion must make evident and real, its contribution to "making democracy work."

"Its riches and its resources must be channeled out to the community if it expects a return in the shape of the endowments which most colleges must soon replenish," he said. "Take one illustration. Colleges and universities can make a greater contribution to the American radio in furnishing it with finer and more attractive educational and entertainment programs than are now available.

"This is particularly true with small radio stations, which are located near many of our small colleges. Musical programs, plays, round-table discussions on vital current topics, are all illustrations of resources now too frequently bottled up on campuses, which the college should release to citizens greatly in need of that education which alone can make democracy work more harmoniously.

"This is no trifling matter. The future of democracy and of American ways of life are at stake, no less than our colleges themselves. In the interest of self-survival, the colleges must recognize their obligation to their own areas, which is their way of contributing to the maintenance and rehabilitation of democracy nationally and in the world."

Mrs. Thomas D. McAvoy, chairman of the Potomac District, told of the objective of the alumnae during the anniversary period of raising funds through a national effort for the building and endowment of a student-alumnae hall on the college campus at Chambersburg. Mrs. John H. Wanner described the facilities which would be provided. Mrs. Verner C. Boggs, president of the Washington Club, presided.

The dinner here was one of many held throughout the country last night by Wilson College Alumnae, who also listened to a broadcast from New York City with the president, Dr. Paul Swain Havens as speaker.

Miss Mary and Miss Elizabeth Wightman, of Washington, and Mrs. Thomas Alexander Mellon, of Pittsburgh, daughters of the first president of Wilson College, were guests of honor at the local dinner.

Mrs. Garland Terry was in charge of arrangements for the affair.

Mr. Weddell Addresses Club

Alexander Weddell, U. S. Ambassador to Argentina, spoke yesterday on the Friday program of the Congressional Club, the second held since Mrs. Edward Burke became president.

The Ambassador discussed the set-up of the government of Argentina and pointed out the similarity of its constitution to that of the United States. He made other comparisons between the two countries and said there were certain respects in which he thought this one might profit from the example of its South American neighbors.

Mrs. Weddell also was a guest and they promised to return perhaps next season and describe their interesting home, Virginia House, as a program for the club.

Ambassador Weddell was introduced by Mrs. Charles F. McLaughlin, chairman of the entertainment committee. About 100 were present.

The club officers have issued invitations for a breakfast Monday honoring committee chairmen and women of the press. Thursday a series of informal membership dinners will be inaugurated.

Alumnae Council Of Sweet Briar To Meet Today

The council of the Sweet Briar Alumnae Association will hold its February meeting today at Wardman Park Hotel. Mrs. Howard Luff, of Cleveland, Ohio, who is national president of the association, is here to preside at the sessions.

The Washington members of the council, Mrs. A. Kent Balls, an alumnae member of the board of governors of the college, and Mrs. Stanley E. Hornbeck, former alumnae secretary, will be present. Other members who are expected to attend include Mrs. Allan Davis, of Baltimore, chairman of the alumnae fund; Mrs. Arthur B. Kline, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mrs. Frederick S. Valentine and Mrs. T. Foster Witt, of Richmond, Va.; Miss Jeannette Boone, of Sweet Briar, and Miss Helen McMahon, present alumnae secretary.

A luncheon will be held at Wardman Park on Saturday between the morning and afternoon sessions and members of the council will be entertained following the meeting by Mrs. Hornbeck at her home, 2139 Wyoming avenue.

Alumnae Dance Scheduled Tonight

The dance of St. Cecilia's Alumnae Association will be held this evening, at the Hay-Adams House, with Miss Louise Anselmo as general chairman.

She is being assisted by the chairmen of the various committees—Miss Celeste Howe, patrons; Miss Genevieve Sullivan, tickets; Miss Angela Simone, hall and orchestra, and Miss Ursula Anselmo, publicity and programs.

A partial list of patrons and patronesses includes Miss Mary Adele Baden, Mr. and Mrs. James Colliflower, Miss Mary Cranston, Mr. and Mrs. William Dwyer, Miss Margaret Tappan, Miss Mary Fay, Miss Mary Flynn, the Misses Garges, the Misses Hall, Miss Irma Halloran, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hurney, Mrs. A. P. Kane, Miss Eleanor McGlynn, Joseph C. Michalowicz, Miss May Monogue, Miss Audrey Neff, Mrs. Lewis A. Payne and Miss Shirley Ray.

Robert E. Lee U. D. C. To Entertain Monday

Robert E. Lee Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, will entertain Confederate veterans, sons of Confederate veterans, the District of Columbia Division, U. D. C. and friends Monday at Confederate Memorial Hall, 1322 Vermont avenue northwest, from 9 until midnight. Miss Liza Ellen Carpenter is chapter president.

Mrs. R. B. Whitehurst, chairman of entertainment, has arranged a program after which there will be dancing.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

PREPARATIONS for the annual ingathering of new members were made yesterday at a meeting of the executive committee of the Woman's Council of the Washington Federation of Churches, held at the federation headquarters, 1749 N street. Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, president of the council, presided and Mrs. C. F. Jackson, chairman of denominational representatives, issued instructions for the membership campaign.

There will be special emphasis on the ingathering this year in observance of the fifteenth anniversary of the council. Mrs. Jackson will be assisted by Mrs. W. J Bullis and Mrs. J. R. Hardesty, editor of the news letter, 1,000 copies of which go bimonthly to individuals in the various churches.

Following the business meeting yesterday there was a tea and Col. William O. Tufts spoke on the work of the Goodwill Industries.

Denominational representatives and the captains and lieutenants in the various churches who work under them attended. The denominational representatives are Mrs. S. T. Hughes, Baptist; Mrs. J. W. Bittner, Church of the Brethren; Mrs. Hans Sorenson, Community; Mrs. M. D. Herron, Congregational; Mrs. F. J. Hobbs, Disciples; Mrs. Dudley N. Carpenter, Episcopal; Mrs. S. W. Stewart, Evangelical; Mrs. Alfred Gould, Evangelical and Reformed; Mrs. Bernice Johnson, First Brethren; Mrs. C. H. Hall, Friends; Mrs. J. Luther Frantz, Lutheran; Mrs. John L. Rogers, Methodist Episcopal; Mrs. John H. Ray, Methodist Episcopal South; Mrs. Wallace N. Streeter, Methodist Protestant; Mrs. Mason B. Leming, Presbyterian, U. S. A.; Mrs. John L. Parkes, Presbyterian, U. S.; Miss Annie Blair, United Presbyterian.

RURAL INSTITUTIONS make for the stability of the country, Albert W. Atwood, distinguished author and lecturer told members of the Capital division of the Woman's National Farm and Garden Association yesterday. The members held their February meeting in the Y. W. C. A. with Mrs. Jay Winston John, of Charlottesville, Va., the president, here to preside.

Mr Atwood discussed the contribution of the rural areas to the life of the Nation both from an economic standpoint and from that of the sturdy qualities of character and citizenship it develops. In this connection he cited Lincoln as the foremost example of such leadership.

THE CIVIC SECTION of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase yesterday received two flags each, a gift from a past president of the club. Mrs. Eugene E. Stevens presented that of Maryland and Mrs. Karl Fenning that of the District, which will stand on the stage of the new clubhouse with the American flag.

Mrs. Edward H. Helmuth, chairman of the section, presided at its meeting and Miss Frances Leishear, superintendent of the Montgomery County Hospital, was the speaker.

MISS MARGARET LAMBIE will speak before the Chi Omega alumnae at their supper meeting Tuesday night on "Shepherds' Pipes." Miss Lambie, who is a widely known international lawyer, several years ago became interested as a hobby in the making and playing of the pipes. She and others similarly interested have now formed a pipers guild in the District, a branch of the national organization.

Pi Phi Alumnae To Give Dance

A benefit dance for the Pi Beta Phi settlement school in Gatlinburg, Tenn., will be given February 17 in the Chevy Chase Woman's Club, Connecticut avenue and Dunlop street, by the junior group of the Washington Alumnae Club, of which Miss Marie Jorolemon is president. The party is the first large affair planned by the juniors since they were organized a few months ago.

The senior club will have its regular meeting Tuesday, February 14, at the home of Mrs. James Greear, 3532 Edwards street, with Miss Florence Berryman and Miss Mary Hornaday, two members, as speakers.

Plans will be discussed for the District conference of the sorority, which will be held at the Washington Hotel April 28 and 29.

Mrs. B. Harrison Lingo has been appointed conference guide and Mrs. R. H. Pledger delegate from the Washington Alumnae Club. The banquet, April 29, will be in charge of Mrs. Rogers Fred, the settlement school arrowcraft display in charge of Miss Marion McCoy; the reception the evening of April 28 is under the chairmanship of Mrs. Maurice Davidson; hospitality, Mrs. Griffith Garwood.

There will be round table discussions of college and sorority matters.

Old Fashioned Bee To Feature Program

An old-fashioned spelling bee will be a feature of the meeting of the Columbian Women of George Washington University Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in Columbian House, 2033 G street.

It will be led by Mrs. William C. Ruediger and Miss Margaret Pepper. Mrs. Ruediger won a spelling bee at Atlantic City last summer. Everyone will be privileged to participate, and, with the benefit of Mrs. Ruediger's experience, it is expected the occasion will be an entertaining one.

Miss Alice Hutchins Drake will preside at the tea table during the social hour. The women graduates of the February class of 1939 are invited to this meeting as special guests, under the sponsorship of the junior group. Miss Drake will be assisted by Mrs. W. DeWitt Bennett and Mrs. Hulbert Bisselle.

A short business meeting will follow the tea, conducted by the president, Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin.

Gloves Get Fancy

Vaughn Class Hears Capital Morals Decried

50th Anniversary Fete Hears Challenge by Presbyterian Pastor

Moral conditions in Washington today are as great a challenge as in Francis Vaughn's day, the Rev. Peter Marshall, of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, said last night at the Golden Jubilee dinner of the Vaughn Men's Bible Class at Calvary Baptist Church.

Preceding Dr. Marshall's address, the men heard class leaders and others laud the founder of the organization, largest of its kind in the world, who in 1889 canvassed stores, shops and offices in search of class members.

One of those who formed the nucleus of the class was present last night as an honored guest. He was Dr. Eugene C. Rice, honorary chairman of the jubilee celebration.

Still Saloons Here

"There are still saloons on this street," declared Dr. Marshal, "and while they no longer have swinging doors and brass rails, they still have the same smell. They are now fashionable and legal. If it was a challenge to Vaughn 50 years ago, it is a challenge to you men today."

Among those who paid tribute to Vaughn was Lin C. Drake, local Boy Scout executive and teacher of the class, who, comparing Vaughn's inspiration to St. Francis of Assisi's experience, said that ". . . I know not what similar experience came to Francis Vaughn, whether in vision with flaming sword or in quiet persuasion, Jesus bade him leave and follow. But I know, and so do you, that the consuming passion of his life was the saving of men."

Dr. William S. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, and Louis Bliss, a former teacher, also spoke, with the latter calling attention to the accomplishments of Dr. Samuel H. Greene, who conceived the idea of forming an adult department at Calvary in 1889.

Justice Hughes Sends Letter

At the begining of the program, letters of congratulation were read from Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes, John D. Rockefeller, jr., Dr. J. Stanley Durkee, former pastor of First Congregational Church and former president of Howard University, and the leading women's classes of the church. Hughes and Rockefeller, as well as the late President Harding, once addressed the annual banquet.

Clyde C. Crouch, class president, served as toastmaster and guests included Representative Luther Patrick, of Alabama, who spoke briefly; Representatives W. P. Lambertson, of Kansas; Clyde Garrett, of Texas; Noah Mason, of Illinois; Herron Pearson, of Tennessee, and William L. Nelson, of Missouri. All the legislators present were members of the class, except Mason and Pearson.

Also attending were Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, executive secretary of the D. C. Baptist Union; Page McK. Etchison, president of the D. C. Organized Bible Class Association; Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden, pastor of the First Baptist Church, who gave the benediction; George E. Harris, executive secretary of the Bible Class Association, and others.

Music was provided by the Vaughn Class Orchestra, the Chevy Chase Chanters and Joshua Miler Taylor, harpist. Earl B. Fuller was song leader. The Rev. Frank E. Johnston, Calvary assistant pastor, gave the invocation.

The fiftieth anniversary committee, in addition to Dr. Rice, consists of Charles H. Cooke, general chairman; Nelson M. Blake, William L. Ford, George E. Harris, Frank M. Hoadley, Frank R. Mitchell, John A. Patterson, R. Spencer Palmer, Herbert H. Primm, Richard A. Sauer, Crawford J. Smith, Edward L. Tolson and Frederick L. Kohler.

Around the Town

Frank W. Carpenter, 81, testified in District Court yesterday that his 48 years of marriage was just one separation after another and Justice Luhring gave him a divorce.

Attorney Jean M. Boardman presented Carpenter's story that they parted for keeps in 1911.

Signs Closed Shop Pact

The first full closed shop contract ever made in Washington between a hotel and its employes was signed yesterday between the Hamilton Realty Corporation and Locals 781, 80 and 75 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes Alliance, it was announced by Secretary F. E. Whitney, of the union.

Besides the closed shop, the contract calls for vacations with pay, free uniforms, 8-hour day, time and one-half for overtime, and extra pay for split shifts. More than 200 employes of the Hamilton Hotel are affected.

Hobby Exhibit at Central

A Cub Hobby and Handicraft Show will be held today at Central High School by the National Capital Area Council. The program will consist of the display of hobbies and exhibits in the gymnasium from 2:30 to 3:30 p. m., followed by stunts, songs and a moving picture in the auditorium.

A large percentage of the council's "cub" membership of 1,537 is expected to participate in this annual event. Col. Stuart C. Godfrey, cubbing commissioner, is in charge of the affair.

Fight a la Whisky Bottles

The radio call sent a scout car rushing to the 1500 block of Columbia street northwest, where there was "a fight and plenty of guns."

Arriving there, the car's occupants found no guns but on the sidewalk were five pints of whisky and down the block was a man who was putting as much space between him and the policeman as possible. Halted, he explained he had been in a fight but his opponents were no longer available. Beyond that he said nothing.

Gem Thieves Get $230

Harry Slavin, proprietor of the Slavin Jewelry Store, 843 Seventeenth street northeast, told police yesterday that burglars broke into his shop earlier in the day and escaped with jewelry valued at $230.

Private Sleuths In Again

A regulation to compel private sleuths to maintain their offices downtown in commercial districts and not at home, in residential districts, is being prepared by Edward W. Thomas, assistant corporation counsel.

The request for the regulation was made by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, Thomas said yesterday. Under the zoning regulations "home occupations" are permitted in residential districts, he pointed out. "As soon as they begin hiring employes and locating their offices in their homes then the trouble begins," he said.

Police Autos Stolen

A detective sergeant and a private of Metropolitan police reported automobiles stolen when they reported for work yesterday morning. The automobiles were their own.

Detective Sergt. Thomas M. McVerry, of 1740 E street northeast, attached to Fifth Precinct, said his machine was taken from in front of his home. The same story was related by Private John O. Patton, of 2222 M street northwest, when he checked in at Ninth Precinct Station.

President Feels He Can't Act in Merit Muddle

Indicates Nothing Can Be Done for Barred Relief Workers

President Roosevelt said yesterday he intended to do nothing about the dilemma of some 55,000 workers paid out of relief funds who are barred from taking the final step into the merit system by a provision in the $725,000,000 deficiency relief resolution.

He feels, in fact, that there is nothing to be done. Although there had been some speculation that he might issue a third executive order exempting these employes from civil service, he did not think this was necessary.

Instead, he intimated, workers half-way under civil service, but paid out of relief funds will remain barred from entering. That is, they will be eligible to go through the necessary steps for admission, but they dare not take advantae of this for fear of being cut off the payroll.

Question has been raised as to whether the very fact that these employes had been made eligible would, under the deficiency resolution ban, force them to be dropped from the payroll. The provision becomes applicable, however, only if workers are "placed in the competitive classified service."

About 30,000 Works Progress Administration workers and 25,000 in other agencies are paid out of relief funds.

$210 Furniture Stolen

Mrs. Frances Perry, 8911 Fairview road, Silver Spring, Md., yesterday reported to police that $210 worth of furniture had been stolen from the house at 1938 Summit place northeast, of which she is caretaker.

Police Boys' Club Seeks $75,000 Fund

Money to Go for Regular Activities And Expansion

A campaign to raise $75,000 for expanded activities of the Boys Club of Metropolitan Police was announced at the fifth annual meeting of the organization in the Hotel Ambassador last night.

Re-election of James E. Colliflower as president for 1939, and of Maj. Ernest W. Brown as first vice president, preceded the announcement, which was made by John A. Remon, chairman of committees, in building the club's financial structure.

Other officers re-elected were L. Gordon Leech as secretary, of Robert V. Fleming as treasurer, and James A. Councilor as comptroller. Forrest L. Binswanger was retained as club director. Dr. M. G. Gibbs was elected second vice president.

The executive committee consists of officers named and Morris Cafritz and R. F. Garrity.

It was announced the $75,000 fund will be raised between February 27 and March 18 by private subscription.

The money will go for the clubs, of which there are now five, with a membership of 12,707 boys; expansion of activities at Camp Maj. Ernest W. Brown, at Scotland, Md., and the possible addition of one more club.

Braille Book-Making Class

A class in braille transcribing and preparation of books for the blind will begin at the District Red Cross chapter house, 1730 E street northwest, at 7 p. m. Monday.

Riflemen Still Decide Wars, Maj. Gen. Marshall Declares

Deputy Chief of Staff Says One Of Lessons Learned in France Is 'Tremendous Power of Infantry'

Riflemen will determine the ultimate decision in any future war despite the present airmindedness of the world, Maj. Gen. George C. Marshall, Army deputy chief of staff, declared last night.

"In any war we may enter in the future," he told the National Rifle Association, "the foundation of military action will be the infantry rifleman and his first cousin, the machine gunner."

Gen. Marshall stressed the tremendous difficulties in training infantry and drew attention to the fact that "it is almost impossible to simulate actual war conditions in peace time."

Find Nazis in Advantage

One of the profound lessons learned in France, he emphasized, "was the tremendous power of the infantry soldier on the battlefield."

In the current world armament race, Gen. Marshall said, Germany enoys an enormous advantage because she was able to provide her greatly expanded army with entirely new weapons and was not compelled to modernize a huge store of equipment, as other nations have been compelled to do.

Explaining that the Versailles Treaty had restricted the Reich's military power to an extremely small force provided with the barest necessities in weapons, he remarked, "This is the first time nations have not grown old together in armaments."

Started From Scratch

When Germany threw off the restrictions imposed at the end of the World War, she enjoyed all the advances in armaments and planes made by other nations and had been prevented by the peace settlements from bearing a major part of the cost, Gen. Marshall said.

The Reich, he added, "could start from scratch. . . . She could re-equip her forces completely with new armaments and had the advantage of developments made by other nations as well as her own excellent laboratory research work. Furthermore, Germany could reintegrate her production of arms within her economic system to obtain the maximum efficiency."

Brig. Gen. H. A. Pickert, Detroit police commissioner, stressed the value of small arms training in the work of law enforcement and added, "There is no greater asset we can give our military commanders than a large group of citizens trained in the use of rifles and small arms."

Guests Listed

Among the guests at the banquet were Gen. A. B. Critchfield, Dr. H. C. Byrd, president of the University of Maryland; Gustavus D. Pope, former president of the National Rifle Association; J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce; Maj. Gen. M. A. Reckord, Gen Malin Craig, Army Chief of Staff; Dr. Thomas A. Healey, dean of Georgetown University School of Foreign Service; Maj. Gen. Albert H. Blanding, chief of the National Guard Bureau; Maj. Gen. Emory S. Adams, Adjutant General of the Army; Maj. Gen. George A. Lynch, Chief of Infantry; Maj. Gen. Robert McC. Beck, jr., Assistant Chief of Staff; Maj. Gen. Charles R. Reynolds, Surgeon General of the Army; Maj. Gen. Charles M. Wesson, Chief of Ordnance; Brig. Gen. Lorenzo D. Gasser, Assistant Chief of Staff; Brig. Gen. Albert L. Blanding, chief of the National Guard Bureau; Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, commander of the District National Guard; Brig. Gen. Charles F. Dallas Dort Heads Personnel Division of WPA

Dallas Dort, executive assistant to WPA Administrator Harrington, yesterday was appointed assistant administrator of a newly created division of administration within the WPA.

DORT

Dort, a native of Flint, Mich., Princeton graduate and member of the Federal Bar Association, is 31 years old. He had served as executive assistant to Col. Harrington since Harrington became administrator last December. He previously held several executive posts within the WPA and had served the CWA, FERA prior to 1933.

The new division Dort heads will deal with administrative matters, particularly in relation to State and regional offices. It will be responsible for classification of personnel in the Washington headquarters and the field.

Hazen Seeks Aid to Halt D. C. Exodus

Commissioner Urges Lower Rentals and Better Transportation

A move to provide lower rents for District residents, to keep them from moving into nearby Maryland and Virginia communities, was inaugurated yesterday by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen.

Alarmed at the exodus of hundreds of District residents into Maryland and Virginia, Commissioner Hazen disclosed he had conferred with local real estate and construction officials to provide more and lower rental real estate developments here.

D. C. Handicaps Listed

Hazen said a frank discussion of the situation revealed the following:

Transportation facilities within the District must be improved because many Virginia and Maryland residents now are able to arrive downtown faster than many District residents.

It is claimed that the taxes here are higher than in the other communities, but local residents do not recognize that the District bears the cost of providing bridges across the Potomac and Anacostia rivers, and super-highways leading into Maryland.

Zoning and strict building regulations in the District make for development across the State lines.

Water and sewer improvements must be paid in three years in the District, but in the neighboring States the cost is spread over a large number of years.

Plan Being Drafted

Commissioner Hazen said that approximately 200,000 persons are now living in the nearby communities and that approximately $40,000,000 has been spent in the past four years for developing these communities.

"Something must be done about the exodus of the local residents, and something will be done," he said.

The home builders committee of the Real Estate Board, Hazen said, is preparing a list of recommendations to deal with the "ever-increasing" problem.

Union Asks Embargo On Fascist 'Invaders'

A petition urging the "embargoing of arms shipments to Fascist nations invading Spain" as well as the lifting of the embargo against the Spanish government was presented yesterday to Senator Key Pittman, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, by a delegation representing the Hotel and Restaurant Employes Alliance, Local 781.

Alpern Sleep Drug Death Is Called Accidental

A certificate of accidental death was issued yesterday by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald in the death of Carl C. Alpern, an attorney with the Wage-Hours Administration.

Alpern was found dead in his room in a hotel January 2. MacDonald said the man had taken an overdose of sleeping tablets.

Scientist Retires So He Can Be Own Boss

[This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding that so-called "old-age" is really lots of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are.—Editor's note.]

By Gerald G. Gross.

None of that "work until I drop" stuff for John M. Barrett.

Three years ago, on reaching the statutory retirement age of 70, he left the Smithsonian Institution after 46 years service, the last 18 of which were spent chipping fossilized animal bones from their rock formations and helping reconstruct the dinosaur and other extinct beasts you've seen in the National Museum.

Did he make up his mind, then and there, to keep on working at something? He did not, unless one can be said to work at relaxation and doing what one pleases. That about sums up what Mr. Barrett has been doing since he began a new life at 70.

The only blot upon his escutcheon of delicious idleness is the fact that he keeps bees on his 155-acre farm in Westmoreland County, Va., and sells between 500 and 600 pounds of honey a year. A mitigating circumstance, however, is that he only sells the honey. The bees make it.

Knows How to Relax

All this palaver about his predilection for taking retirement literally is somewhat exaggerated, of course. Mr. Barrett makes himself mighty useful around his farm, where he spends most of each summer, and he is a handyman around his home at 1014 Independence avenue southwest. It's simply that he has the knack of knowing how to let down and relax.

Let others, if they like, begin writing books, painting pictures or taking up esthetic dancing when they arrive at the 70 mark but not John Barrett. If that is their way of enjoying life, more power to them. He'll keep on finding his pleasure in raising bees, hunting squirrels and rabbits, eating and sleeping. And, of course, continuing to be a dutiful husband and father.

The Barrett home is directly across the street from the Smithsonian buildings. His old workship being so convenient, he was asked if he didn't drop in occasionally to take up again his hammer and chisel or kibitz a bit on some skeleton reconstruction job. Wasn't it, he was asked, quite a temptation.

"No, indeed," he replied blithely. "Of course, I stop in often on my way uptown. But it's only to chat with my friends. I don't do any work."

No More Bones for Him

He modified that a bit, though, pointing out that some of his trips to the museum are for the purpose of marketing his honey. His old colleagues are among his best and steadiest customers.

He used to keep several hives full of bees in the rear of his house. Sometime ago he sold them to the Agriculture Department because "I was afraid they might sting somebody."

JOHN M. BARRETT

In truly taking things easy and resisting the retired fire horse tendency to dash out of green pastures when a bell sounds, Mr. Barrett is only keeping the promise he made to a Post reporter just before he left his job three years ago.

"'I've had my fill of bones,' he said, chipping away at the rock-covered whale skull on which he was working. 'I'm not even going to have a dog on my place for fear he may scratch up some.'"

GALENTO KNOCKS OUT NATIE BROWN IN 4TH ROUND

Louis Sees D.C. Fighter Flattened

Natie Knocked Down 11 Times; Stages One Brief Flurry in 2d; Tony Rushes His Foe

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Feb. 3.—Tony Galento, the Orange (N. J.) barkeeper and the National Boxing Association's No. 1 challenger for Joe Louis' heavyweight title, moved into the champion's home town tonight and celebrated the occasion by flattening Natie Brown, of Washington, in 1 minute and 13 seconds of the fourth round.

The roly-poly Galento had the battle-scarred Brown on the floor ten times before he dropped him with a roundhouse left to the chin.

While Louis himself watched, Galento came from his corner in a rush, backed Brown to the ropes with a series of lefts, then dropped him with a club-like right to the jaw four more times in the same round. He battered Brown on the canvas, but the Washington fighter managed to drag himself back to his feet on each occasion.

The only semblance of an attack Brown showed in the entire fight came in the second, when he rose from his feet and doubled Galento with a series of right-hand smashes to the fat boy's midriff.

Galento's jabs and roundhouse rights put Brown on the floor twice in the third round. Natie was on the floor at the end of that session, but the bell saved him.

The knockout blow came after a right to the stomach had doubled the Washington boy in two and brought him from the floor in apparent agony.

Louis was introduced from the ring and walked over to Galento, but Two-Ton Tony refused to shake hands with the champion. Louis' only comment after the fight was: "He didn't look so good to me. I think I could take him."

Spokane New Training Site For Redskins

Washington's Redskins, runners-up for the Eastern championship of the National Football League last season, will train at Spokane, Wash., General Manager Jack Espey announced last night following a telephonic conversation with Coach Ray Flaherty. Now at Spokane, his home town, Flaherty closed the deal yesterday which will send the Tribesmen on the longest training jaunt in either professional football or baseball history.

The Athletic Round Table Club, a sports-minded group of Spokane businessmen promoting sports for charitable purposes, guaranteed the club a substantial sum for training at Spokane, Espey reported, topping a bid previously submitted by Duluth, Minn. It also is the first time on record, a hasty perusal of records reveals, that any city has sponsored the training program of a pro football club.

Terms of the contract signed by Flaherty were not divulged, but the document calls for one exhibition game against a club to be named, at Spokane, which will be a feature of the city's portion of a State-wide program celebrating the golden anniversary of Washington's admission to the Union. Flaherty, Espey added, also hoped to play another game en route to Washington, if the team's league schedule permits. The schedule, which also will govern the opening of the training season, will be drawn up next Thursday at a meeting in Chicago.

Spokane, it is believed, will be more suitable for training than Washington and vicinity, which was abandoned because of the intense heat and humidity which handicapped the men last year. The Western city's climate is said to be ideal for football in the latter part of August and early September and Flaherty is confident he will lead a well-conditioned group of athletes East.

Flaherty also leaned toward Spokane as a training site because he makes his home there, is an alumnus of Gonzaga University there and because many of his players hail from Pacific Coast universities. Turk Edwards, Ed Justice, "Automatic" Karamatic and Max Krause are a few of those hailing from the Far West.

No definite training site has been selected by the club, but Flaherty is negotiating with officials of his alma mater for the use of Gonzaga's field.

Benner, G.W. High Coach, Marries

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, Va., February 3.—Willis Benner, former University of Maryland sports star and present assistant director of athletics at the George Washington High School here, was wed this afternoon to Miss Helen E. Turner, of Spartanburg, S. C. The ceremony took place at the Emmanuel Lutheran Church and was conducted by the pastor, the Rev. Elmer F. Leonhardt. Following a short wedding trip, Benner and his bride will make their home here.

Benner has been serving as assistant athletic director at the local school since September, when he was appointed as aide to Head Coach Albert Doran, former University of Ohio star. He has served as junior varsity mentor in football and basketball and will coach the varsity track team this spring.

Terps Never Headed, Lead 33-17 at Half

Show Chapel Hill Best Basketball of Season; Register Their Sixth Conference Victory

Chapel Hill, N. C., Feb. 3.—Maryland scored its second straight victory over Tarheel opposition tonight by easily defeating North Carolina's White Phantoms, 66 to 41. The Terps will conclude their invasion of this State against N. C. State at Raleigh tomorrow night.

The Old Liners presented the finest passing and shooting quintet to visit here all season.

Maryland swept into the lead in the first minute of play on a field goal by Pershing Mondorff and was never headed. With George Dewitt and Eddie Johnson pitching them in from all angles, the Terps went far in front midway of the first half and at the intermission enjoyed a 33-to-17 lead.

Dewitt and Johnson were joined by George Knepley, All-Southern guard, in the wild scoring spree that kept up in the second half. Johnson and Knepley each bagged three field goals after intermission and Dewitt batted in four.

The entire Maryland team played a consistently good brand of ball and the Tarheels were badly outclassed throughout the contest.

Ben Dilworth, with 11 points, was North Carolina's offensive luminary. The victory was Maryland's sixth in seven conference starts this season and their second straight over the Tarheels. Score of the first contest was 34 to 32.

Columbus Boxers Win Debut, 6½-1½

Columbus University's ring team puffed and punched its way to a 6½-1½ decision over DeSales College in a lively session of swing last night at Turner's Arena.

Two knockouts, both scored by the District team, featured the milling, which produced some good, bad and humorous fisticuffing. Most of the home boys were puffing before the end of the second round, apparently suffering from a lack of proper conditioning, but all were in there punching to the end.

The knockouts were credited to Buddy Lazear, who fought southpaw style last year but resumed an orthodox stance last night, and Dave Schlaiffer. Lazear flattened Bernie Quilter after 1 minute and 30 seconds of battling in the first round with a smoking left hook to the pit of the stomach. The blond DeSales boy absorbed a lot of leather before Lazear uncorked that left, and it simply knocked all the wind out of him.

Schlaiffer met a boy in no better physical condition than himself in Al Collins, and finally won on a technical knockout in the second round when Collins almost collapsed from sheer exhaustion.

DeSales accumulated its point and a half through the medium of three draws, two of which were gross injustices. Referee Harry Volkman also was guilty of a faux pas in the heated heavyweight engagement although he acted within the letter of collegiate law. Volkman saved Lou Hayman from being knocked out at the hands of pudgy Bob Brazzil, halting the fight in the second round after Brazzil had floored Hayman with a brisk right chop to the chin.

The punch, and Hayman's nose-dive, brought a loud roar from the audience, and Volkman halted hostilities until quiet was restored. The rest gave Hayman sufficient time to collect his scattered wits, and he cautiously jabbed and boxed with the big fellow over the remainder of the distance. Brazzil, a clear winner on The Post scoresheet, got a draw.

Almost as bad was the draw given Hugh Graff. De Sales in his joust with Jim Brown. Graff carried the last two rounds by a wide margin, rocking his opponent with looping rights to the chin, but the officials decided Brown did as much damage and deserved as much credit.

127-POUND—Paluch (C) drew with Marcopolis.
135-POUND—Silva (C) defeated Rosenfelder.
145-POUND—Lazear (C) knocked out Quilter (1 minute 30 seconds, first round).
155-POUND—Schlaiffer (C) won by technical knockout from Collins (1 minute 34 seconds, second round).
165-POUND—Crum (C) defeated G. Graff.
175-POUND—Brown (C) drew with H. Graff.
HEAVYWEIGHT—Hayman (C) drew with Brazzil.

American Yachtsmen Sweeps Star Class

Havana, Feb. 3 (AP).—United States yachtsmen completed a sweep of the international star class regatta today by defeating Cuba in the team race 21 to 15. Previously, invading skippers captured the Bacardi trophy and the cup of Cuba.

Ace II, entry of Adrian Iselin 2d, showed the way home with Harold Halstead's Chuckle III, winner of the cup of Cuba, in second place.

Zeke Bonura Spurns Holdout Idea; Wants to Please Terry

Former Nat First Sacker Working Hard to Make Good With Giants; Happy Over Pay

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, Feb. 3.—Zeke Bonura is taking his baseball more seriously than ever this year, and says he isn't even going to be a holdout.

Zeke's friends, who met him last night at a banquet on the Coast, said Bill Terry, boss of the New York Giants, would be agreably surprised when he meets Bonura late this month at Hot Springs to find out how well the big fist-baseman was keeping himself in shape.

BONURA

"What's the matter, Zeke, are you slipping?" one of his friends inquired. "I mean, you're not a holdout? How come?"

Zeke's reply was, "How can you be a holdout when a manager like Terry gives you more money than you ever made in a season?"

28 Dodgers on Line

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—The signed contracts of Freddy Fitzsimmons, rotund knuckle-ball pitcher, and Luke Sewell, veteran catcher, arrived at the offices of the Brooklyn Dodgers today and swelled the club's total of signers to 28. The salaries were not announced.

Manager Leo Durocher is counting heavily on Fitzsimmons, who won 11 and lost 8 yast year and ranked fifth in the National League's earned run column with a 3.01 figure. At the age of 37, Fitz is embarking on his fifteenth year in the majors. Sewell, purchased from the White Sox last December after 17 seasons in the American League, is expected to serve as a replacement for Babe Phelps.

Beau Bell Gets Break

St. Louis, Feb. 3 (AP).—Beau Bell's salary did not drop with his batting average, the Browns disclosed today after the outfielder's signed contract was received.

Bell, after hitting .340 in 1937, slumped to .262 last year. He was a stubborn holdout for higher wages before the 1938 season.

"I think Bell was rather surprised to find that the club was his friend," Vice President Bill Dewitt, of the Browns, said. "He always had regarded us as a natural enemy."

Terps Rated Even Against Va. Ringmen

A couple of well-groomed and confident Maryland ring teams invade the citadel of Southern intercollegiate boxing today, journeying to Charlottesville for a double-header with the potent delegations representing the University of Virginia freshmen and varsity teams.

Scheduled at 4 o'clock this afternoon, the freshman bouts are expected to lure some 2,500 fans to Memorial gymnasium, but the varsity contests, scheduled for 8 o'clock, will pack the Cavaliers' coliseum to its dusty rafters.

Dates Mixed, But St. John's Wins 1st Game

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 3.—A mix-up in dates brought the Randolph-Macon basketball squad to Annapolis and brought with it St. John's first victory, 33 to 30, in 12 starts this season.

At the end of the regular game, the score was knotted at 27 points, Shawn and Tuckey leading in the scoring for the Johnnies and McFall and Hubbard for the visitors.

In the extra period, Buck scored from the line for St. John's and Shawn followed with a two-pointer. Then Welch scored from the floor. Shawn tossed the ball through the ring from the line, Luce followed with a line goal for the Yellow Jackets and Tuckey turned in the final point with a field goal for the locals.

Bettina Stops Fox in Ninth In 'Title' Bout

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—Melio Bettina, a hairy little fellow with a lot of heart and dynamite in both hands, won the New York version of the world's light-heavyweight championship by stopping the highly-favored Tiger Jack Fox, of Spokane, Wash., in the ninth round of their 15-round struggle at Madison Square Garden. Bettina weighed 172½, Fox 174¾.

A 3-to-1 underdog against the long-armed Negro, the Beacon, N. Y., clouter floored the coast fighter with a vicious left hook in the eighth round and had him helpless on the ropes at the bell. Then he continued his one-sided punching spree in the ninth until referee Eddie Josephs halted the proceedings at 1 minute, 22 seconds of the session.

A crowd of 7,947, including nearly 1,000 fans from Bettina's home-town, who had marched up Broadway and into the Garden headed by a band, howled and cheered as the up-Stater achieved his surpise technical knockout victory against the man regarded as one of the stiffest punchers in the division in years. The gross gate was $18,189.85.

'Cash and Carry' Dies in California; Ran Bunion Derby

Los Angeles, Calif., Feb. 3 (U.P.).—C. C. Pyle, sports promoter and sponsor of the famous New York-to-Los Angeles "bunion derby," died tonight at his home in North Hollywood. Death was attributed to a heart ailment.

Pyle, 57, known as "cash and carry" in the days when he sponsored Suzanne Lenglen, the French tennis player, and Harold (Red) Grange, the Illinois football player, on professional tours, has been in semiretirement for several years.

Cambridge Is Defeated, 41-31, on Home Floor; Panago Leads Attack

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cambridge, Md., Feb. 3.—Coach Jack Ray led his Central High five, of Washington, into this city today in a driving rain and the boys from the Capital City went out on the basketball court to take a 41-31 decision over Cambridge High. Coach Ray said his party was on the ferry, en route from Annapolis to the Eastern Shore when the twister hit the bay section.

Central displayed good passing and shooting to win and used only five players in holding the locals at bay. Archie Panago proved the most effective of the Central marksmen with 6 field goals and 2 fouls for 14 points. Ornstein came through with 5 field goals and the other 3 members of the team registered in the scoring column.

Gallaudet Five Bows, 29 to 21

The Wilson Teacher five registered its second basketball triumph over Gallaudet College this year, 29-21, last night in the Wilson gym. It was the Teachers' sixth win out of the last seven games.

At the end of the first quarter Wilson, due to excellent defensive play, held their opponents to one point, while it scored seven. In the second quarter, Gallaudet made a right-about-face, scoring seven points to the ultimate winners' five. However, Wilson led, 12-8, at the half.

This Morning

Without Shirley Povich

(During the vacation of Shirley Povich, this column will be written by members of The Post's sports staff.)

By Jack Munhall.

Now that plans are definitely under way to bring into reality on the flats of the Anscostia River a stadium and sports center that would make Washington eligible for such events as the Army-Navy game it is pleasant to conjure the tremendous impetus such a plant would lend to amateur and, particularly, college athletics here.

MUNHALL

Washington, though few realize it, has collectively a group of colleges which, in major sports, compares favorably with those of any other city. What town, for instance, can show three basketball teams to parallel the average Georgetown, George Washington and Maryland fives of recent years. Or what town can produce a pair of finer boxing squads than have represented Maryland and Catholic University in late years?

That is where the field house, now simply designated by the letter "B" in the diagram of the sports center on display at the new Interior Building, comes into the picture. The field house to seat 15,000, or almost as many as New York's Madison Square Garden, would elevate indoor college sports here to the level of any in the country.

What Ned Irish has done for the collegiate court game in Metropolitan New York could be done here within five years after the erection of the sports center. Imagine the attraction of a double-header bringing together Catholic University and Maryland in boxing and George Washington and Georgetown in basketball.

Nor is that any longer an improbability. Not only have Georgetown and George Washington resumed healthy athletic relations, but there is every reason to believe, also, that there will soon come into existence a District Conference, including the Big Four and maybe even Navy, which will offer competition between those schools in all major sports.

The need for a field house here, contrary to general belief, is far greater than the urge for a vast municipal stadium. Few have been the instances when Griffith Stadium could not accommodate the crowds for the big college and professional football games. But how many times have thousands been turned away from Ritchie Coliseum and C. U. gym when boxing teams of those institutions renewed their splendid rivalry?

This need will be further emphasized come March 8 when George Washington and Georgetown formally inaugurate their new relations with a basketball game at Tech. So certain are authorities of both schools that Tech's seating capacity of 3,200, give or take a few hundred, will be taxed beyond the groaning point that they have reportedly decided to limit to a fixed and small figure the number of students from each school that will be allowed to attend.

It is indeed a sad commentary on the college sports situation in a city of this size when of necessity the colleges may be forced to deny all of their students a chance to see a basketball game of such an intense interest and natural rivalry as the George Washington-Georgetown classic.

But what can be done to accommodate Georgetown's student body of more than a 1,000 and George Washington's of nearly triple that total in the confines of Tech gym? Even if the general public and alumni of the schools could be barred there still would not begin to be facilities to hold the attending students.

That is only one phase of the boon this sports center would undoubtedly bring to amateur sports in Washington. Included in the plans are space for an ice hockey rink, tennis courts and a swimming pool. The growth of ice hockey in the short span of a few months, beginning with the opening of an indoor rink on upper Connecticut avenue, has been remarkable. Already a hockey team representing Georgetown has been practicing for weeks and will embark on its competitive schedule tonight. Overnight, other hockey clubs have sprung up at George Washington and at American University and smaller schools hereabouts. Granted an arena with a regulation size floor and a seating capacity of 15,000, these schools could, with no difficulty, be banded into several leagues, the colleges in one group for boys and another for girls, and prep schools in still a third.

College boxing, too, would expand magically with the erection of this field house. Georgetown, if it has been forgotten, once regarded boxing as a major sport and turned out among many other great amateur fighters Ham Fish, national intercollegiate middleweight champion. Why then, if adequate facilities are provided for boxing, could not the Hilltop again enter this field of athletics? Its student body has nearly doubled since the sport was abandoned because of lack of a suitable place to hold contests which in turn propagated indifference among the student body.

Nor would it require high pressure salesmanship to convince George Washington of the monetary advantages of developing boxing teams, if it could be guaranteed a share of $20,000 gates.

The possibilities for increasingly better amateur sports attractions would be unlimited with the birth of a sports center. It's up to all Washington fans to get behind the movement to obtain the necessary appropriation, and then work together until the sports center does become a reality.

G. U. Coach May Shake-up Team

Ripley Alarmed At Losses, Hints Of 'Laying Down'

By Jack Munhall.

Alarmed at the slump of his Georgetown basketbal team, which has assumed the proportions of four straight losses, three suffered on a recent Northern road trip, Coach Elmer Ripley yesterday threatened a radical shake-up unless several players show improvement immediately.

Intimating that certain boys had not given their best, especially in the Army game, which he termed "disgusting, from the Georgetown point of view," Ripley is prepared to send a revised line-up against West Virginia in an important Eastern Conference game at Tech Monday night.

Following hard on the heels of that miserable road trip and heaping fresh lines to Ripley's furrowed brow, came yesterday's announcement that Al Mutuza, one of his most dependable reserves, would be lost for the remainder of the season because of an illness, which, though not serious, necessitates complete rest.

The loss of Matuza, regular center of the undefeated Georgetown eleven, is a most serious one at this time because of the scarcity of capable substitutes on the G. U. squad, a weakness which contributed in no small way to their recent losses. Although the Hoya regulars were exhausted by successive hard games with Syracuse and Fordham, Ripley could not afford to rest them against Army and as a result Georgetown received one of its worst lacings in late years, being routed 36-17.

Stripped of Matuza's services, Ripley wasted no time in seeking replacements and after considerable scurrying popped up yesterday with another pair of husky football men, Bob Kercher, All-District end, and William Wixted, also an end. Both boys are only lately eligible scholastically.

And while Kercher and Wixted are far from finished players, now Ripley believes both will be distinctly valuable additions before the end of the season. Sophomores,

Wilson Upsets Riders, 32-31; Tech Routs Western, 29-20

By Bill Burnett.

Its inability to cling to a lead it had gained the hard way—in a whirlwind rally—accounted for the second interhigh basketball loss of Roosevelt last night, a 32-31 trimming by a classy crew of Woodrow Wilson players. The other half of the double-header at Eastern gym went to Tech with a 29-20 smearing of Western's Red Raiders.

With the victory, Wilson came within a single game of Eastern's defending champions who pace the league. Wilson has won three straight, while the loss dropped Roosevelt farther into third place with two won and two lost. Its victory was the first of the series for Tech, putting it in fifth place directly under Central.

Though the finale between Western and Tech was hotly fought, the opener proved the most exciting of the two clashes because of the close score. Roosevelt was forced into the game minus its finest player, Hymie Perlo, due to a dressing room disagreement with his coach, Herman Littman. The remainder of the squad showed the effects of Perlo's absence, too, playing a sloppy, disinterested brand of ball.

Wilson in Front

Wilson, without wasting time, jumped into a 5-0 lead in the opening quarter and managed to come out with a 9-5 lead at the whistle. The second period saw Wilson continue to widen the margin, Bart Fugler and Don Malone contributing successive double-pointers to give the team a 20-13 lead.

Gradually Roosevelt began to function against the airtight zone defense of the Presidents. George Zuras, Rider guard, took a hand in proceedings in the third period, combining with George West and Ernie Travis to cut Roosevelt's deficit to 27-23 after three quarters.

Then came the powerful rally of the Riders, favorites to whip Eastern for the title. West dropped a long pot shot as the final period started, but the effort was matched by Charles Findley, Wilson center. West and Travis sunk consecutive baskets to tie the count at 29-29. Wilson again took a lead with Tommy Haycock's foul throw, but Zuras put his club out in front with a perfect sleeper. With only 30 seconds remaining, Don Maloney sewed up the game with a lengthy aerial from center court.

The Western-Tech business was something else again from the competitive angle. Tech functioned as anticipated for the first time this season, crowding the Raiders behind a 10-6 lead in the first half, and never being headed thereafter.

Maroon Midgets Win

It was probably the most decisive upset in the series to date, Western having had the praise of observers showered on it since the first of the season. Against the fire and fight of the Maroon Midgets, however, Western was hopelessly outclassed, and even more than the 9-point difference indicates.

Hero of the clash was Tech's veteran Blank, a potent factor on the defense and an eagle eye in the scoring department. He totaled 10 points for point honors.

each stands better than 6-feet, and Kercher, a mite of a lad at 6'4 will be the tallest player on the team, towering half an inch over Forward Joe Murphy and a full inch over Center Joe McGowan.

Should Ripley's threat of a shake-up materialize Francis (Reds) Daly, a local boy and a graduate of Tech High School, will undoubtedly be benefitted. Daly and Joe McFadden, both football players who were outstanding in prep school basketball, have been pressing hard for regular jobs and if their improvement continues may land on the first five, regardless of what happens to those now in an unfavorable light.

The West Virginia game, important for Georgetown since the Hoyas are second in the conference, is the first of two contests they face this week. Wednesday Georgetown invades College Park for another of its traditional battles with the increasingly powerful Maryland team. This latter fray shapes up better almost daily as the Terps continue their surprising drive to a Southern Conference championship.

You Can't Tell Them Apart, but They Stand Out in Sports

The Robertson Twins, Main Cogs in Roosevelt's Teams, Looking Ahead to Bright Future

By Bill Burnett.

Way back in 1920, some 15 years before Mama Dionne introduced her brood of five little girls to a startled world, another Canadian mother in Montreal caused a mild stir in her own family circle by giving birth to two lusty boy babies.

It was no record performance, like that of Mama Dionne, but it should have interested the people of Washington. Those two howling babies were to have an important effect on Washington's sports situation about 18 years later.

When the twins' father died two years later, the distracted young mother brought her three boys and two girls to Washington. She and they were placed under the supervision of Clark Griffith, a rising young baseball magnate who happened to be the mother's brother-in-law.

Now the Robertson twins, Billy and Jimmy, are two of the main cogs in Roosevelt High School's title-bound basketball squad. Billy, the chunkier of the two by a split shade, is the captain of the team and Jim is a first-line reserve.

Shine on Diamond

As far as anyone remembers, they are the first identical twins to take part in high school athletics here. By identical, we mean identical. Except for the fact that Bill wears a huge R on his green sweater and Jim doesn't, you can't tell them apart as readily as the proverbial peas.

Their basketball talents are only slightly obscured by their prowess on the diamond. Bill (if you still remember which is which) plays a regular berth at shortstop for the Rough Riders, and Jimmy fills an outfield post. Both are heavy hitters.

Though only juniors at Roosevelt this year, it is their last season with the Rider basketball and baseball outfits. They will be ineligible next year because of the high school age rule. Billy says they may transfer to Staunton Military Academy for their final year of high school sports.

Look to Pro Baseball

As might be expected, the Robertsons have a hotly burning desire to play professional baseball. They look to Uncle Griff for a chance, if not in actual playing ranks, then in a managerial berth. Their brother, Calvin, whom Uncle Griff adopted, has made good in the minor league manager's job he was given, and the Robertsons feel they can do as well.

So far the only connection the Robertsons have with big league baseball, beyond the fact that their uncle is president of the Nats, is one most people take lightly. It's pretty important, though. They help dispense those delicious hot dogs Uncle Griff serves at his park.

Card Mittmen Favored Over Duke Tonight

C. U. Overconfident, After Terp Draw, May Be Surprised

Noticeably over-confident after holding Maryland's mittenmen to a 4-all stalemate last week, Catholic University's ring team entertains Duke's Blue Devils tonight at Brookland in the lone collegiate boxing match on the District calendar. The first bout is scheduled for 8:30 o'clock.

Beaten by South Carolina and Maryland, Duke, nevertheless, has an outside chance of upsetting the Cardinals on a basis of its past performances. Hard hit by graduation, the inexperienced squad has shown great improvement since the start of the season, and will invade Brookland with large ideas of upsetting the LaFond-coached team.

"Chuck" Kasik, Duke lightweight who scored a surprising victory over Ben Alperstein, of Maryland, is the team's outstanding ringman. Kasik has long been regarded as one of the best 135-pounders in the conference, and is touted as the probable 1939 champion at that weight.

Well represented in the two heaviest classes, and hopeful of springing an upset at the expense of one of Catholic's smaller gladiators, Duke has visions of holding its host to a draw at least, and any disposition to take it easy on the Cardinals' part may have disastrous results. Ed Morel, light-heavyweight, and Pete Brooks, who waged a great fight in the heavyweight bout with Maryland's Steinbach before losing, will carry the Carolinians' colors in the last two bouts on the program.

Catholic will be represented by a newcomer in the 120-pound class in the person of Ricardo Fernandez, whose debut was postponed last week. Lenny Bartone, whose surprising but decisive victory over Bob Bradley enabled the Cards to hold Maryland to a draw, will follow him into the ring. The rest of the team will be comprised of the following: Nestor Martinez, Bill Gearon, Joe Bunsa, Gerry Strang, Fred Stant, Jay Turner and an unannounced newcomer.

Hoyas Oppose Baltimoreans On Ice Tonight

City's First Hockey Match Scheduled at Chevy Chase Rink

Garfield Kass, owner of the Chevy Chase Sports Center and the man who has been chiefly instrumental in bringing the Nation's most popular winter indoor game here, will throw out the first puck. The referee will be S. Ambrose, well-known Baltimore official and a great ice hockey player in his own right.

The Georgetown Hockey Club team finished its practice for the game yesterday and Coach Boyle expressed keen satisfaction with the progress shown by his charges. Many of them former prep school stars, the Hoyas have shown a remarkable aptitude for teamwork and expect to offer stubborn opposition to the highly touted Baltimore invaders. The standout Georgetown player in recent practice has been John Smith, an All-New York City scholastic choice when at Brooklyn Prep.

Foremost among the All-Stars is Joe Paul, who was chosen by Life Magazine as the outstanding college center last season. Paul who also was selected on the All-Maryland State scholastic squad played his first hockey at Baltimore Poly. Another dangerous Baltimore star is Chuck Beeler, one of the most promising young goalies in the game today.

Tickets for the game will go on sale at 7 tonight at the Chevy Chase Ice Palace. Admission is 40 cents for children and 85 cents for adults. Patrons may skate afterward for the one price. The public session will begin immediately after the game and will be lengthened if the crowd warrants it.

N. Y. Entries Advance in Badminton

Mary Ryan, Capital Star, Loses Opening Singles Match

The first day's matches in the second annual District Open Badminton championships, at Kensington's National Guard Armory, saw New York entries come through with flying colors. Empire State players, headed by Mrs. Roy Bergman, national women's singles champion of last year, won matches in both the first and second round men's singles, the first round of women's singles, first and second round of men's doubles, and women's doubles.

Miller Rolls 195 Game at Chevy Chase

Leads Service No. 2 In Gas Light League; Other News of Alleys

H. B. Miller, of Service No. 2 team, rolled a season's record high game for the Washington Gas Light Bowling League and also the second highest game in the District this season last night when he posted a 195 at Chevy Chase Alleys. Miller also rolled high set of the evening, 431.

Real Estate

Smith of District Title, took high individual game honors in the Real Estate League at Chevy Chase with a 153 and Jenk Brown, Davis & Co., high individual set, 372. District Title's 581 was good for high team game and Davis & Co.'s 1,701 was high team set.

Acacia

The Montgomery team set two season records for the Acacia League at Arcadia, rolling a game of 533 and a set of 1,546. Keuchle was the big gun with a game of 149, while Freeman's set of 361 was high for the evening.

Interstate Commerce

Stuart, of B. M. C. Records, rolled high game, 135, and C. Smith, Informal Cases, high set, 346, in the Interstate Commerce Commission League at Arcadia. Traffic's 548 was high team game and its 1,569 high team set.

Navy Yard (Men's)

Wade Koontz, Miscellaneous, rolled 143 for high individual game in the Navy Yard Men's League at Lucky Strike. Charley Nicholson has high individual set, 393, Miscellaneous high team game, 609, and high team set, 1,729. Miscellaneous won two from Apprentice to retain its league lead and Breech Mechanism took the odd game from Supplies, as Joe Fowler led the attack with a set of 340.

Country Club

Dr. Greeves, of Beaver Dam No. 2, had high individual game, 152, Earl McPhilomy, Manor No. 1, high individual set, 340, Manor No. 1, high team game, 607, and high team set, 1,755.

30 Pin Stars In Campbell Sweepstakes

Open to Maryland and Virginia bowlers for the first time and also jammed into one day, another new feature, the Howard Campbell Sweepstakes opens at Brookland today at noon and the champion will be decided at the final block tonight at Convention Hall, starting at 8 p. m. The second block is listed for Lucky Strike at 3 p. m.

A field of at least 30 are expected to post the $28 entrance fee for the 15-game affair and shoot for the title held by Astor Clarke. Howard Campbell, namesake of the event and now working at the Brookland pin plant, will be the only entry that has competed the 12 years running.

First prize money probably will amount to $250 for the city's first and outstanding pin tournament. Outstanding among the out of town entries will be George Demeres, Richmond, while Baltimore, Philadelphia and other cities are expected to be represented by star pinmen.

Meanwhile the top-notch women pin stars of the country will trek to Baltimore today for the United States Women's Sweepstakes, with the favorites in the usual positions of Ida Simmons, No. 1, and Lorraine Gulli, No. 2. Miss Simmons is defending champion.

Nearly 100 bowlers are expected at Convention Hall at 3 p. m. tomorrow for the initial block of the Charley Bell Open Handicap Sweepstakes, competing for first prize of $150, with $100 added by Wootten Young, convention hall president. The event is a 126-average scratch, and other one-half handicap up to 100 pins. The second and final block will start at 7:30.

Gonzaga Five Beats Bethesda

The basketball forces of Bethesda-Chevy Chase lost their ninth game of the season yesterday on the suburban court, Gonzaga Prep taking a 33-20 victory after trailing in the opening period.

A 10-5 advantage belonged to Bethesda as the teams started the second period, but the edge quickly disappeared under the ministrations of Gonzaga's Freddy Rice and Bill Councilman. Gonzaga led, 17-12 at the half. From that point on Bethesda was never able to make a close game of it.

Bethesda probably suffered by the absence of Johnny Shumate, sparking guard, from the lineup, Johnny Mizell, substitute forward, paced the team's scoring with 8 points. Rice, of the victors, turned in the best scoring performance, however, taking point honors with 10. Four of these were on accurate foul shots.

HoyaTrackmen Race Tonight In New York

Georgetown's Mile Relay Team Entered In Millrose Games

Following tonight's competition in the Millrose games at New York, Georgetown University's track squad faces a schedule of five indoor and four outdoor meets, Track Coach J. V. Mulligan announced yesterday.

Tonight will mark the Hoya thinclads' first meet this season, and because the squad is unusually small and comparatively green, Mulligan is sending up only the mile relay team, composed of Newmeyer, Alnwick, Capt. Healey and Motzenbecker.

The Hoyas, however, will be better represented in the Penn A. C. games at Philadelphia next Friday and also in the succeeding four indoor meets, the N. Y. A. C. games at New York, February 18, the Southern Conference championships at Chapel Hill, February 25, the C. U. games and intercollegiate championships, both on March 4, and the annual Maryland-Fifth Regiment games at Baltimore, March 11.

Outdoors the features of Georgetown's schedule are the Penn relays at Philadelphia, late in April, and the intercollegiate championship at New York, May 26-27.

Complete schedule:

Indoor Meets

Millrose, New York, February 4; Penn A. C., Philadelphia, February 10, New York; N. Y. A. C., New York, February 18; Southern Conference, Chapel Hill, N. C., February 25; C. U. and Intercollegiate, at C. U. and New York, March 4; Maryland-Fifth Regiment Invitation, Baltimore, March 11.

Outdoor Meets

Penn relays, Philadelphia, April; dual meet at Maryland, May 10; D. C. championships, Maryland University, May 3; intercollegiate championships, New York, May 26-27.

Patty Berg Beats Miss Miley, 7 and 5

Coral Gables, Fla., Feb. 3 (AP).—Patty Berg ripped off four birdies and an eagle to overcome Marion Miley, of Lexington, Ky., today, and head for her fourth straight victory in the Miami-Biltmore women's golf tournament.

The strapping Minneapolis miss was 4 under par for the 13 holes she played to defeat Miss Miley, 7 and 5, in the third round. Her semifinal opponent tomorrow will be Laddie Irwin, of Glen Ridge, N. J., who bested Mrs. Harvey F. Mack, of Easton, Pa., 6 and 4.

It is rather interesting, though somewhat surprising, to find Max Schmeling in our midst again. Not that he isn't welcome around pugilistic circles, for he is one of the most pleasant, affable and intelligent fighters who has climbed into a ring since Gene Tunney retired from the heavyweight throne.

Still, his presence comes as something unexpected and creates a bit of mystery. Just why did he come across the Atlantic this time? Heretofore his purpose has been apparent. First to build himself up in the business of boxing. Next time to challenge for the heavyweight championship. Then to fight for it.

He Didn't Fight Braddock

Everyone knew why Max came across before; all except once. That was the time that he came here to train for a fight with Jim Braddock with the heavyweight crown at stake. No one quite understood why he came that time, for it was public knowledge that Max wasn't going to fight Braddock and the only person against whom Braddock was going to risk his laurels was Joe Louis. Max's transatlantic crossing hardly seemed worth the trip.

He would have you believe that he came this time to arrange for a fight. But that explanation hardly seems plausible. Schmeling isn't interested in fighting just for the exercise. Nor does he need the money he could get from a bout with Tony Galento, Max Baer or any of the other pretenders to the throne. Schmeling is interested in the pugilistic profession only so far as it concerns the championship of the world.

I believe that Max really would like to have the title above everything else that the sphere of sports has to offer, which includes a considerable amount of cash, even without a title involved. But I also believe that Max realizes he never is going to wear the heavyweight crown again. Max is 33 years old—Joe Louis is a strong, savage young man, and Schmeling isn't anybody's idiot.

Welcome Stranger

So I doubt very much if Max came over to arrange for a future bout in an American ring. His visit may be due to the recent reports about his difficulties in Germany, and his presence may be for the simple purpose of directly denying that those difficulties ever existed. But they were political troubles, that had no bearing on his standing as a pugilist, and so the American public perhaps isn't very interested in whether they existed or were mere figments of the imagination, which incidentally, Schmeling insists.

The only interest the public in this country has in Schmeling is as a former heavyweight champion and as a possible challenger for the present titleholder. In the role of diplomat or propagandist or even gentleman of leisure, he is just another tourist from across the seas. And as it seems extremely doubtful that he ever will fight again, at least on these shores, his age and past experience being what they are, it was rather surprising that so much attention was paid to his arrival.

Max may be bowing out of the picture around these parts. Perhaps he has come to say farewell, and it seems to me that he has added a great deal to the pleasure and entertainment of the American people by his many visits to these lands.

Flying Lill, Don Meade Up, Pays $5.70 in Bartow Purse

Ace Jockey Scores Triple At Hialeah

Four Flamingo Stake Eligibles Defeated In Feature; Paddy Takes Place Money

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 3.—Flying Lill, with the redoubtable Don Meade handling the reins, raced to her third victory in as many attempts this winter when she easily defeated five other 3-year-olds, four of them Flamingo Stakes eligibles, in the Bartow Purse. The Flying Heels miss, owned by Mrs. C. H. Cleary, romped over the wire four lengths in advance of Wheatley Stable's Paddy. Shannon Farm's Morstep was headed out of the place.

The victory was Meade's second of the day and his forty-second of the meeting. It was just another step up the ladder in the veteran's comeback climb. There have been very few days here that Meade, who signed a one-year contract with George Odom for the 1939 season, has missed stealing the spotlight.

Meade completed a triple when he piloted Short Distance to victory in the seventh race, after booting Rosemain home in the second event on the day's program.

Flying Lill stepped the six furlongs in 1:11 1-5 and returned $5.70. The filly was a close second choice to Samuel D. Riddle's Get Off, which was making his first public appearance since last November. Get Off lacked early foot but closed gamely to finish a head behind Morstep.

The Flamingo eligibles in the field were Paddy, Get Off, Balmy Spring and Doubt Not.

Paddy looked a winner for at least half of the trip. Ruperto Donoso quickly urged the colt into a daylight lead while Meade was rating Flying Lill along in second place. Paddy, under snug restraint early, was put to a drive when Meade made his move with Flying Lill at the top of the stretch, but there was no denying Meade and his fleet mount. Flying Lill bounded into command turning into the stretch and just toyed with the field thereafter.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—IDA ROGERS, $2.80, $2.20, $2.20; PIRATE SHIP (dead heat), $2.40, $2.60; MAETRAN (dead heat), $2.30, $2.50.

IDA ROGERS began rapidly, drew clear in the opening furlong and held away the remainder of the trip to win with something to spare. PIRATE SHIP bore to the inside after the start, but went in nearest pursuit of the leader all the way and held on gamely when it came to a drive to dead heat MAETRAN. The latter, away forwardly, swerved toward the inner rail in the opening furlong, finished gamely to punishment and would have been a clear second in another stride. DARBY DALLAS made up ground in the stretch run.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 2:31. Off 2:34½. Winner, J. Hartman's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROSEMAIN, $18.40, $9.90, $7.10; TAUT, $9.90, $7.10; HOLIDAY TEA, $12.60.

ROSEMAIN, going in much improved form, broke alertly and, going forwardly on the outside of the leader in the early stages, assumed command when ready, to win as her rider pleased. TAUT, prominent all the way, closed gamely in the final drive, but never threatened the winner. HOLIDAY TEA worked her way up on the outside and bore out badly on the stretch turn, closed well through the stretch and outlasted BLUE FANG. The latter saved ground early and came between the leaders entering the stretch to finish stoutly. GIBOIR broke slowly and could never reach serious contention.

Daily Double, Ida Rogers and Rosemain, Paid $40.40.

THIRD RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:02. Off 3:02½. Winner, P. L. Kelley's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WOODSIA, $12.00, $6.30, $4.20; COBE, $3.80, $3.00; VOLO SNOW, $7.20.

WOODSIA, away forwardly, forced a steady pace, raced BRIERTON into defeat rounding the turn, took command straightening out into the stretch and held COBE safe in the final drive. COBE eased off the pace the first half mile, made a game bid when called upon, but then hung in the final drive. VOLO SNOW broke well, but lacked speed and was outrun early, gained steadily to punishment in the last quarter mile and was wearing COBE down. WISE MENTOR moved up with a bold challenge entering the stretch, but faltered when the real test came.

FOURTH RACE—Seven furlongs (chute). Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:32. Off 3:34. Winner, H. P. Headley's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TOP QUEEN, $26.00, $9.70, $4.90; RANGE DUST, $3.90, $3.40; HANDIBOY, $3.90.

TOP QUEEN, slow to get going, began to better her position after leaving the backstretch and, saving ground, responded gamely to punishment after entering the stretch, came around the leaders in the final furlong, wore them down and won going away. RANGE DUST, pinched back in the run down the backstretch, was taken to the outside on the stretch turn, moved up rapidly and took command, but faltered when the final test came. HANDIBOY, a keen contender all the way, continued with good courage in the stretch drive. PRADIS, under vigorous pressure all the way, finished stoutly.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. The Kelsey City, Grade C. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 4:01. Off 4:04. Winner, Maemere Farm's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAELINE, $2.90, $2.70, $2.20; SPEEDY BOOGER, $4.00, $2.90; MERRY GESTURE, $2.40.

MAELINE, alert at the start, held his opposition safe for speed and drew clear in the opening quarter mile, saved ground thereafter and always held away to win under brisk pressure. SPEEDY BOOGER, a keen contender all the way, saving ground, responded gamely to strong urging, but could not improve his position. MERRY GESTURE gradually improved his position and easily shook off TRAVEL AGENT in the last furlong. The latter weakened in the final furlong.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,100; allowances. The Barrow. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:34. Off 4:35½. Winner, Mrs. C. H. Cherry's br. f. (3), by Flying Heels—Lalla Wild. Trained by C. T. Porter. Value to winner, $775; second, $175; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:22 3-5, 0:45 1-5, 1:11 1-5.

DOUBT NOT	(Anderson)	113	4	3	5¹	6	6	6	16.30

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FLYING LILL, $5.70, $3.50, $2.80; PADDY, $4.90, $3.80; MORSTEP, $6.00.

FLYING LILL, rated off the early pace until straightened into the stretch, took command at her leisure and won with speed to spare. PADDY displayed keen speed while saving ground, was no match for the winner, but continued gamely and outlasted MORSTEP when the final test came. MORSTEP, well up on the outside all the way, closed with good courage, but could not improve his position. GET OFF, slow to settle into his stride, was taken around the leaders entering the stretch, gained steadily on his own course and a race is certain to put him on edge.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200; allowances. The Naples. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post 5:04. Off 5:06. Winner, Mrs. N. Ray's b. f. (4), by St. James—Nearby. Trained by N. Ray. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 4-5, 0:48 2-5, 1:12, 1:37 3-5, 1:49 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SHORT DISTANCE, $11.10, $5.20, $4.10; BOB'S BOYS, $4.60, $3.60; GO HOME, $3.40.

SHORT DISTANCE took command at the start, held his opposition safe for speed, was rated in front while saving ground and maintained his lead with determination under a hand ride in the final drive. BOB'S BOYS, pocketed on the inside until straightened into the stretch, forced his way through between the leaders approaching the furlong pole, but could not overhaul the winner. GO HOME went prominently on the outside under steadying restraint until entering the stretch and closed gamely to outlast PASTRY. The latter, kept close to the pace, faltered when the real issue came.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 5:38. Off 5:40. Winner, Mrs. E. D. Jacobs' ch. m. (8), by Pompey—Jezebel. Trained by H. Jacobs. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 4-5, 0:48 1-5, 1:12 4-5, 1:39 2-5, 1:51 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JEZREEL, $5.50, $3.90, $2.80; BIG VICTORY, $5.70, $3.70; BLACK GIFT, $4.40.

JEZREEL, a forward contender on the inside all the way, forced her way through between the leaders coming into the stretch, assumed command with a rush and won under slight urging. BIG VICTORY, rushed clear of the field going to the first turn, showed good speed, but was not equal to the winner when challenged. BLACK GIFT gradually improved his position in the last three furlongs and shook off WOODWAAC in the last furlong. The latter began to falter on the stretch turn.

$1,000,000 Sale Of Stock Denied Gulfstream Track

Tallahassee, Fla., Feb. 3 (AP).—The Florida Securities Commission rejected an application from the Hollywood racing syndicate to qualify for public sale $1,500,000 of participation certificates in revenues of the Hollywood Jockey Club.

Official records showed today the application was denied "for the reason that the enterprise or business * * * is based on unsound business principles." There was no further explanation.

The Hollywood Jockey Club opened its Gulfstream Park racing track Wednesday, about 15,000 spectators wagering nearly $225,000 in pari-mutuel pools. Attendance yesterday was about 3,500.

Wheat Prices Slightly Lower In Dull Market

Pit Traders Remain Inactive With Dearth Of Buying Orders

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Feb. 3.—Wheat prices showed only ⅝ cent change during the entire session today in one of the narrowest, dullest markets on record.

For 3 hours and 40 minutes quotations held within a rut of only ¼ cent. In the last five minutes they moved ⅛ lower, finishing ¼-½ below yesterday's close.

Traders idling about the pit with only a few orders to fill blamed the inactivity largely on poor speculative interest, which, they said, was the result of a combination of factors. Although this is normally a dull season in the grain trade, the complicated international political situation, existence of surplus supplies throughout the world and government price-supporting operations in many nations have reduced investors' incentive to participate in the market, they said.

Fractionally lower prices reflected declines at Liverpool and lagging export demand. Liverpool finished unchanged to ⅛ off after having advanced slightly earlier in the session. The ¼-½ lower close here put May and July at 68⅜-¾. Corn was ⅜-⅝ down, May 50¼-⅜, July 51⅜; oats unchanged to ⅛ higher; rye ⅛ off to ⅛ up; lard 12 to 13 lower.

Glenn Martin Payroll Rises for 5th Month

Baltimore, Feb. 3 (AP).—The Glenn L. Martin Co., makers of air bombers and flying boats, announced today employment reached an all-time high for the fifth successive month in January.

The company announced 4,128 persons were employed at its Middle River factory last month. The plant is operating 16 hours each day in two shifts, five days each week. Glenn L. Martin, president, said production could be increased to 1,200 planes a year by inaugurating a 24-hour, seven-day working schedule.

Cotton Futures Up 4 to 6 Points In Late Buying

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—A late buying spurt today lifted cotton futures for net gains of 4 to 6 points, October finished at 7.48, up the maximum swing.

The last-minute wave of orders was traced in the trading ring partly to New Orleans interests and to houses dealing mainly in cotton for immediate or early delivery. Activity was mostly in the nearby delivery months.

In the absence of any more indication what would be done in Washington about the accumulating surplus of American cotton, largely held against Government loans, traders studied business trends at home but found little in the day's news to encourage large-scale buying.

N. Y. Bank Stocks Gained in January

New York, Feb. 3.—New York City bank stocks closed January with moderate net gains, Holt, Rose & Troster report. Weighted average of 17 leading issues opened January 3 at 41.49 and declined to month's low of 41.24 on January 12. In the following week, however, an advance of over 8 per cent carried the average to month's high of 44.63 on January 20.

Insurance stocks in the New York City market were slightly lower for January, according to the report. Weighted average of 20 issues opened January 3 at 50.35, and after reaching month's high of 51.34 on January 20, eased off to month's low of 48.89 on January 26.

Retail Trade Scores Advance In Past Week

Volume of Business Increases, Says Dun & Bradstreet

By the Associated Press.

New York, Feb. 3.—Despite stormy weather retail trade enjoyed a moderate recovery in the past week and "sentiment was generally more cheerful," said Dun & Bradstreet today in their weekly business review.

"Blizzards virtually paralyzed business in some areas during part of the week," asserted the review, "but volume for the country as a whole expanded slightly despite this handicap.

"The year-to-year gain of 1 to 5 per cent estimated for the week compared with a decrease of 3 to 8 per cent recorded in the preceding week."

First Rise in Month

This improvement, the report pointed out, marked the first rise in retail volume over last year in four weeks. For most wholesale comparatively dull "after the inmarkets, it continued, the week was tense activity of preceding weeks when trade shows were in session.

"However, the lull in buying seemed to be no more than that normally anticipated for this period, and wholesalers made no change in their estimates of the volume of reorders that might be expected later this month.

"Frequent requests for fill-in winter goods gave support to the evidence that larger carryover stocks were not general. Wholesalers also were encouraged by the fact that buyers seemed satisfied with values offered and did not protest the price advances that were made.

$100,000,000 Bills Offered by Treasury

The Secretary of the Treasury gave notice yesterday that tenders are invited for Treasury bills to the amount of $100,000,000, or thereabouts. They will be 91-day bills; and will be sold on a discount basis to the highest bidders. Tenders will be received at the Federal Reserve Banks, or the branches thereof, up to 2 p. m. Monday.

Tenders will not be received at the Treasury Department.

Commodity Index Advances in Week

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday that its index of wholesale commodity prices rose 0.1 per cent during the week ended January 28, due largely to advancing prices of livestock, fruits and vegetables.

The advance brought the index to 76.7 per cent of the 1926 average—0.3 per cent below a month ago and 4.5 per cent below a year ago.

The Market

By J. D. Tompkins,
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Are Generally Lower as Traders Resort to Profit-Taking Most Foreign Bonds Hold Steady

New York, Feb. 3.—Stocks closed irregularly lower today after a series of minor ups and downs with turnover, at 543,270 shares, sinking to the low for any five-hour session since September 22. Merchandising issues were firmest and made moderate advances. Utilities failed to follow through on their advance of the previous day but finished steady and the same was true of foods. In other divisions, however, tendencies were lower, notably in steels and coppers.

Bonds continued firm to buoyant on a continuation of investment demand, railroad liens having a fairly good day considering dullness and mixed aspects of securities generally. Foreign exchanges were quoted at about the same levels as on Thursday with a little more gold engaged for the United States in England and Holland. Cotton was up 4 to 6 points while wheat was unchanged to half a cent down.

Profit-Taking Leads to Dullness.

Hesitancy as well as dullness of share markets could be traced to profit-taking by in-and-out traders more than to news, although the latter gave no particular incentive to the buying side. Most holders, however, were disinclined to let go, and neither did the lower quotations attract much in the way of new commitments. Only 639 issues were traded—about half the total listed. Twenty-two stocks recorded new highs and 14 were at new lows.

A. T. & T. Report Is Favorable

American Telephone sold off 2 points on good news, the company reporting that the January gain in subscribers had established a new all-time peak. Leading steels showed losses of a point or more. Anaconda and some of the other coppers gave up considerable ground on moderate activity. On the other hand, active utilities firmed fractions, including Commonwealth & Southern, North American and Commonwealth Edison.

Motor Shares Inactive

Motor shares were among the dullest. Assemblies for the last week of January were down about 10,000 units from the preceding week, but this was due to bad weather and not slackening of demand. Ward's meanwhile, has made an upward revision of its first quarter production estimate. With January assemblies about 368,000 units, February output is conservatively estimated at 300,000 and March production 325,000 to 350,000 or more.

Car Registrations Up

Polk's find that passenger car registrations for December were 13 per cent above those for November and 26 per cent ahead of December, 1937. For 1938, however, registrations for such vehicles were off 46 per cent and truck registrations 41 per cent.

Bond Trading Quiet

Listed bond dealings were quiet today, with changes small in all divisions. Best grade utilities stood out among the investment issues, while Government bonds and other corporate securities held to former levels. Among speculative bonds small gains were more numerous than losses. Brazilians remained active in the foreign section, which otherwise was dull. Turnover in all bonds was $6,290,000, or slightly under the preceding day.

Utility Issues Improve

Highly rated utility obligations showed best results, as investment buying continued unabated. Telephone debentures attained fresh highs, and fractional advances also were common among top notch power and light mortgages. Rail and industrial bonds merely marked time. United States Treasury securities showed only small fractional variations, and guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations also were uninteresting.

Railroads are Higher

Secondary railroad issues attracted a little buying, apparently because the carrier problem really appears to be receiving belated consideration in Washington. Borderline and default rails advanced with the rest. The local traction group was quiet and unchanged, while communications bonds drifted lower. Holding company bonds and industrial convertibles were idle.

Brazilian issues were active and higher, and some interest was taken in Chileans after their long decline. Other Latin-American default bonds also were better. The German group held steady. Italian and Japanese bonds merely hovered around former levels. Highest rated foreigns were inclined lower, but changes were mostly fractional.

Farmers Urged To Give Present Program a Chance

By the Associated Press.

Senator Norris (Independent), Nebraska, advised a group of farmers yesterday against trying to change the present farm program "until it's had a fair chance."

The farmers had just completed three days of testimony before the Senate Agriculture Commitee, during which they backed enactment of a bill for Government price-fixing of farm products.

Half a dozen farmer witnesses criticized the crop curtailment features of the present act, saying that as a result of reduced crops and low prices farmers faced a new wave of mortgage foreclosures.

They argued that labor, business and industry—nearly everybody except the farmer—now benefited by price-fixing through legislation or commercial methods and asked that the Government put a minimum price on 50 major farm products. The price-fixing would apply only to that part of farm products consumed in this country.

FCC Must Be Kept Free Of 'Hacks,' Says Wheeler

By the Associated Press.

Chairman Wheeler, of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, said last night that "political hacks" must be kept off the Federal Communications Commission to ensure its efficiency under an y reorganization plan. He was discussing a proposal to reduce membership of the commission from seven to three.

FCC Chairman Frank R. McNinch conferred with Wheeler and Senator Wallace H. White, jr. (Republican), Maine, yesterday concerning legislative proposals for reorganization.

26 Companies Report 14% Profit Decline

New York, Feb. 3 (AP).—The first 26 companies to issue fourth quarter income statements reported a 14 per cent decline in profits from the comparable period a year earlier.

A compilation today by the Associated Press placed net income for the group at $88,800,000 during the three months ended December 31, 1938, against $103,700,000 in the like quarter the year before.

This represented a sharp recovery from profit levels of the preceding nine months. This was indicated by the fact profits for all of 1938 were barely half those chalked up the year previously, $261,300,000 compared with $517,000,000 12 months earlier.

New Products, Says DuPont, Would Aid Employment

Wilmington, Del., Feb. 3.—An important contribution would be made to solution of the Nation's unemployment problem, if industry generally could observe a policy of continuously developing new and better products, improving methods of manufacture through scientific research and invention, and courageously investing venture capital, says Lammot du Pont, president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Mr. du Pont forecasts the need not only of establishing new industries but of effecting changes in old industries that will reduce wastes and costs.

Recalling the Brookings Institution estimated in 1936 that between $25,000,000,000 and $30,000,000,000 would be required to make up the deficiency in durable goods alone that had accumulated during the depression largely because of postponed repairs and replacements, Mr. du Pont emphasizes that the work still remains undone. He says that if it were undertaken, it "would supply jobs to approximately 3,000,000 of the unemployed for a period of five years."

Gold Importations Drop for 4th Week

By the Associated Press.

Gold imports into the United States dropped for the fourth consecutive week in the week ended January 27, to $25,401,320. The Commerce Department said imports in the previous week were $33,321,267.

Last week's imports included $5,226,848 from the Netherlands, $9,839,093 from England, $2,606,608 from Canada, and $4,808,877 from Australia.

The week's silver imports totaled $1,604,020 or about the same as in previous weeks, and included $1,023,348 from Mexico and $62,505 from Canada. Exports amounted to $1,734 of gold and $535,081 of silver.

Butter Receipts Highest in 22 Years

Chicago, Feb. 3 (AP).—Butter receipts in Chicago last month totaled 19,106,509 pounds, heaviest for any January in the 22 years in which official records have been kept.

The receipts, according to the statistical department of the Mercantile Exchange, were 3,547,509 pounds in excess of average January receipts during the past ten years. Shipments of butter to Chicago a year ago totaled 15,475,000 pounds.

Colombia Buys Two Lockheed Transports

Burbank, Calif., Feb. 3.—Lockheed Aircraft Corporation today completed two Electra transports ordered by the Servicio Aereo Colombiano, government-subsidized air line of the Republic of Colombia.

The sale of the two plane to the Colombian line was made early in December when a commission from the republic visited State Department officials at Washington. Cost of the airliners, including standard equipment and engines, is approximately $125,000.

J.P.Morgan Co. Seeking C.& O., Says Young

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Feb. 3.—Robert R. Young declared today that J. P. Morgan & Co. interests were attempting to seize control of the profitable Chesapeake & Ohio Railway from him. Young, who with an associate bought controlling stocks in the Van Sweringen rail system two years ago, said "Morgan interests" were attempting to add two members to the present ten-man board.

The New York financier recently changed C. & O.'s bond financing to an "independent group" at, he said, a $1,400,000 saving on a $30,000,000 issue.

Asked what he meant when he said in the telegram that a "Wall Street clique" was "seeking to retaliate" for the diversion of C. & O. financing to Midwestern interests, Young said today:

"Last spring when they put Earle Baile, John B. Hollister, and John L. Dickinson on the C. & O. board they thought that would enable them to control the C. & O. financing but certain directors whom they expected to be pliable proved themselves to be beyond the Morgan-Guaranty sphere of influence.

"Immediately after the C. & O. financing went to Halsey, Stuart & Co., at $1,400,000 above the Morgan bid, Baile launched upon a program to add two more directors to the C. & O. board who would be subject to Morgan influence."

The Young-Guaranty Trust warfare broke out last spring and resulted in a proxy fight to control the C. & O. board. A compromise eventually resulted in which the three were added to the board, with control still standing with Young.

Wilson, Brookes Named New G.W.U. Trustees

Lloyd B. Wilson, president of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co., and John St. Clair Brookes, jr., prominent member of the District bar, were elected to the board of trustees of the George Washington University at a meeting Thursday afternoon at the university.

WILSON

Brookes holds three degrees from the George Washington University, having received the bachelor of arts degree in 1907, master of arts in 1910 and bachelor of laws, with distinction, in 1913. He has practiced in Washington since 1932 and is a director of the Republic Steel Corporation, International Paper Co., International Paper & Power Co., Harbison-Walker Refractories, Pittsburgh Steel Foundry and Fidelity Investment Association.

BROOKES

Wilson has been active in civic affairs in Washington since coming here in 1929 to head the telephone company, as a member of the executive committee of the Community Chest, the board of Garfield Hospital, Central Committee of the American Red Cross and Washington Cathedral Chapter. He is a director of the Riggs National Bank, Security Storage Co., Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., Terminal Refrigerating and Warehouse Corporation and United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co.

J. C. Willis Dies; Stricken at White House

Assistant Files Chief Acted as Pall-Bearer For Associate Tuesday

John C. Willis, 55, for 30 years assistant chief of the White House files, died yesterday at Emergency Hospital of heart disease, 45 minutes after he was stricken at his desk at the White House.

Mr. Willis was born in Washington October 8, 1883, and entered the Government service at the Government Printing Office on December 5, 1898. In 1908 he was made a member of the White House staff.

Since that time Capt. C. E. Ingling, chief of files, and Mr. Willis built up the present White House filing system. The staff handling files has grown from 3 persons to 28.

He was a pall-bearer Tuesday at the funeral of his friend and associate, E. S. Smithers, chief telegrapher at the White House, who died Sunday.

Mr. Willis resided in Arlington, Va. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Anna Richmond Willis, three sons, Allen, John and Loren Willis; his mother, Mrs. Margaret Willis, 718 Otis place northwest; and two sisters, Miss Elsie Willis, of this city, and Mrs. Edward Graney, Honolulu.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

Mrs. Ada Sweeney Is Dead at 71

Mrs. Ada C. Sweeney died unexpectedly in her home, 1614 North Capitol street, yesterday at the age of 71.

A native of Washington, she was the daughter of the late Mary E. and Charles P. Brecht and was the widow of John F. Sweeney. Mrs. Sweeney is survived by three sons and five daughters.

Services will be held at 9 a. m. at St. Martin's Catholic Church. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

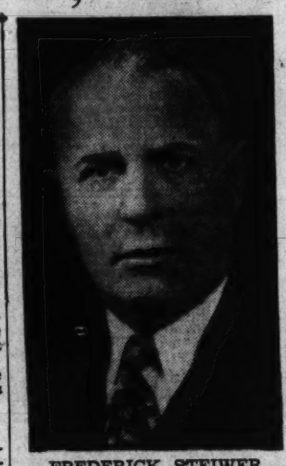
Steiwer, Senator From Oregon Who Quit Last Year, Dies at 55

In Poor Health Since Operation in 1936; Was G. O. P. Keynoter



FREDERICK STEIWER

Frederick Steiwer, Republican Senator from Oregon for 11 years, champion of the Constitution and enemy of New Deal spending, died yesterday at Walter Reed Hospital. He was 55.

First elected to the Senate in 1926 after a long political career in his native State, Steiwer resigned last year, before completion of his second term. He pleaded impaired health and entered private law practice.

"I thought I was an iron man like my father," he said, "but I guess not."

Served in the Argonne

Born October 13, 1883, on a 2,000-acre ranch in the Williamette Valley, 12 miles south of Salem, Oreg., he was the son of John and Ada May Steiwer. His mother was a daughter of Oregon's pioneer secretary of State, Samuel E. May.

At 19, Steiwer entered the University of Oregon and was graduated as a mechanical engineer.

After a few years of teaching, he returned to the university and worked his way through law school. He was admitted to the Oregon bar in 1909 and began practice at Pendleton where, two years later, he married Frieda Roesch, daughter of a pioneer Northwest family.

At Pendleton, Steiwer became district attorney. In 1916 he was elected to the State Senate, which he left the next year to enlist in the Army for the World War.

He saw action in France and served in the Argonne. In 1919, he resumed his Pendleton practice, and in 1926 he ran for the United States Senate, defeating the incumbent, Robert Stanfield.

In the Senate, through early days of the Roosevelt Administration, Steiwer supported some New Deal measures but opposed most of the President's fiscal policies. In his last year, the Senate found him one of the most active Republican critics of the New Deal. He was keynoter at the Republican National Convention in 1936.

Steiwer was taken to the hospital Thursday and with him when he died were Mrs. Steiwer, a son, Frederick, jr., and a daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph McElvenny.

Funeral services will be held Monday at 9:30 a. m. in Fort Myer chapel, the Rev. ZeBarney Phillips, Senate chaplain, officiating. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Realty Brokers' Fees Reduced In District Bill

Reduction from $50 to $30 in annual real estate brokers' fees were provided in a District bill approved yesterday by the Commissioners and sent to the Budget Bureau. Business chance brokers, heretofore exempt from the fee, will be included.

The Commissioners sent an adverse report to Congress on a bill by Representative Bland (Democrat), of Virginia, to prohibit erection of an automobile-testing station at Tenth and F streets southwest. Construction on the project has already begun.

John E. Harding Funeral Is Held

Funeral services for John E. Harding, 77, were held Monday in Richmond.

Mr. Harding, who had been manager of the Richmond branch of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. for 25 years, is survived by his widow, Mrs. Belle Godwin Harding, and five children, Mrs. Lillian Bixby, New York City; Mrs. Pearl Schilling, Greensville, S. C.; Mrs. Bertha Ramkey and Mrs. Martha Coghill, of Richmond, and John H. Harding, Westwood, N. J.

Two sisters and a brother also survive. They are Mrs. Ella Neilson, Mrs. Alfred Barrows and Bernard Harding, all of Washington.

Frank E. Blinn, 70, Dies at Home Here

Frank E. Blinn, 70, retired Government employe, died yesterday at his home, 2914 Thirty-eighth street northwest.

Mr. Blinn was born in Cochituate, Mass. He retired five years ago after a long service with the Department of the Interior. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Margaret Blinn, and a daughter, Miss Florence A. Blinn.

Funeral services will be held from his home at 4 p. m. tomorrow. Requiem mass will be celebrated in Cochituate at 10 a. m. Monday, with burial there.

Joseph Makover Succumbs to Heart Attack

Joseph Makover, 56, president of the Globe Amusement Co. and member of the Washington Variety Club, died unexpectedly last night of a heart attack. He lived at 4825 Blagden avenue northwest.

Mr. Makover was in charge of charitable affairs sponsored by the Variety Club. The first of a series of Saturday night parties, scheduled for tonight, was cancelled when his death became known.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Jennie Makover; a daughter, Mrs. Albert Miller, and a son, Leon Makover.

Colored Robber Of 7 Women Gets 17½ to 28 Years

Convicted of robbing seven women, Joseph T. Jones, colored, was sentenced to serve 17½ to 28 years yesterday by Justice Proctor in District Court. Five others who pleaded guilty to robbery charges were:

Edward Earl Chew, colored, 18, 12 to 18 months for joyriding and grand larceny; Charles E. Wells, 24, colored, 6 to 11 months and a $10 fine for taking $80 from a colored man at cards; Levenston Flippen, 36, colored, 1 to 3 years, for assault with a dangerous weapon; Edward J. Carroll, 20, granted probation from a 6 to 18 months sentence for stealing $30 from a filling station, and Howard B. Hill, 21, 6 to 18 months for the same offense.

Studio Invokes Morality Clause Against Laurel

Los Angeles, Feb. 3 (AP).—Replying to the recent $700,000 breach of contract suit of film comedian Stan Laurel, Hal Roach Studios, Inc., filed an answer today contending he had violated the morality clause of his contract and outraged public conventions through fondness for liquor and publicized quarrels with his wives.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

THE quiet old Forest Service finds itself pretty much in the status quo as the executive orders come and pass into several degrees of muddle. The chief thing is that there were some people in the Forest Service who would have like to have seen the temporary or seasonal field employes given merit status. Others there say it wouldn't have done at all.

These seasonal employes, in the main, are about 4,000 in number and are called into service in the dry seasons of the year. They perch themselves upon high lookout towers with an eye to smoke and incipient fire; they work the trails that lead to fire zones. And the point is that they know what they are doing.

They take work in the Forest Service when they can get it, and, as was said, they are adept. Out of season they take what work they can find. For several reasons, the Forest Service has had to call in many seasonal employes paid out of relief funds. This has cramped the opportunities, somewhat, of the colorful and adept old seasonal worker. The Forest Service would like to have all-year-round employment for these old-timers, but funds and the requirements of relief join against it.

In any event, the executive orders come to iron out the kinks in the service and there are field kinks in Forestry that the high-powered committee charged with the duty of remolding the service, might inquire into while passing.

TO see how the Forest Service functions, several distinguished forest experts from Finland are in town. They are Dr. Ahti Mecklin, director, Finnish Forest Service; Dr. Eino Saari, professor of forest economics, University of Helsinki, and Elgas Kahra, controller general of unemployment in Finland. They were taken to nearby CCC camps, were wined and dined at the Army-Navy Club . . . 'way back in 1884, or thereabouts, Buck Baker worked for the United States Weather Bureau. His job was to ride messages across town on a bicycle, one of the stops being the White House where he let the President know the condition of the clouds, literally. He became so adept on the bicycle that he went to vaudeville, and later to the Ringling Brothers circus, where he became, in the words of Robert Benchley and others, "America's greatest clown."

WORD comes that John McNight, handsome fellah in the Finance and Research Division, FCA, has won the "Gateway to Hollywood" contest locally and goes to the Coast soon. He represents the Washington area. The girls say he looks like Robert Taylor. He says he doesn't—and he's pleased simply because of the chance for such a swell trip. He went to Tech High School here and was graduated from the Hyattsville High with stompin' good grades. He went to Tech High School here and was graduated from the Hyattsville High with stompin' good grades. He went to Tech High School here and was graduated from the Hyattsville High with stompin' good grades. He has been seen on the local amateur stage, and had part in the National Farm and Home Hour program. He is dark-haired, dark-eyed, 23 years old and has been with FCA five years.

NOTES: Someone calls in to say that that promotion machine in the Agriculture Department has an amazing mechanical facility for promoting somebody who is far removed from the office where the "promotion" is to be made . . . In the general hurly-burly of the Executive orders, the question of United States citizenship as a requirement for job holding, has become forgotten. Once it was terribly important . . . A dinner will be given tonight at the New Colonial Hotel by Sergt. Jasper Post, No. 13, American Legion, in honor of Past Commander Daniel M. Goodacre. On the committee are: Commander Hiram W. Hummer (Veterans Administration), Mark T. Little (PWA), Thomas J. Frailey (Veterans' Administration), Harry Jarrett (Civil Service Commission), Leo Collier (Veterans' Administration), Mark Droughman (Employes' Compensation Commission), Russell Clarkson (Veterans' Administration), and Ayden A. Dibble (ICC). There will be dancing . . .

Bob Burns Says—

I got an old friend back in Arkansas who ain't been feelin' so well lately. He's one of them kind who don't like to think too fast about anythin'. But he finally made up his mind to go see a doctor an' get a goin' over. An' when he'd been examined, the doctor said, "Slim, you're plenty run down. Have you been gettin' outdoors, reg'lar?" "No, Doc," says Slim. "I been a lyin' around the house." "Well, that ain't doing you no good," says the doc. "Now, every day, hereafter, I want you to be takin' a tramp through the woods! If you do that, it won't be no time at all before you'll be feelin' tiptop again!"

About a week later, the doc is out on a call on a country road when he sees Slim walkin' outa the woods ahead, followed by the gosh-hangedest seedy-lookin' bunch of bums. "Hello, Slim!" greets Doc. "Say, what's the big idea? Who are these men?" "Why, Doc," exclaims Slim, "I'm just a followin' your prescription, only I'm takin' it in extra big doses! You said I'd feel better takin' a tramp through the woods—so I figgered I'd feel a whole lot better a sight quicker if I took a gang of 'em!"

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

"What should a fellow do under these circumstances?" asks A. F., presenting a hand in which only three of his cards were less than queen in rank.

A-Red Letter Day

He continues: "At an ordinary rubber game on Saturday night, I, as dealer, opened the following hand:

♠AKQ
♡AQ4
◇AK85
♣AKQ

"After some hesitation I bid two diamonds, not expecting other than a two no-trump response, but still hoping that partner might hold a long suit, which he might show on a second bid. But after getting a no-trump response, I got cold feet, jumped all barrriers and bid six no trump, to which I had originally felt the hand was entitled.

"After we resuscitated my partner he found himself confronted with a diamond opening. He held this hand:

♡763
◇Q106
♣8542

"He got an even division on the clubs, entered his hand with a diamond, and the 12 tricks were in the heart finesse failing.

"I am, of course, conscious that my bidding and my partner's play were beyond reproach, but seriously, how would one of the cracks handle this situation?"

Good?—It's Perfect

Such a hand would baffle the experts for they are no more accustomed to picking up such a blinding bunch of honors than the greenest beginner.

A player's first reaction would be to search for a practical joker, and that line of investigation exhausted, he would count his cards again carefully to see that they were all there, and that being done, depending upon his confidence in his partner, he would bid two odd in diamonds, enunciating carefully, or six no trump.

Had he the constraint to bid two odd the first round, wild horses could not stop him from bidding six on the second. Even then it might be an underbid, but he would expect even a timid partner to go to seven on the slightest excuse after his bombastic bidding. It would be a severe taskmaster who would find a flaw in A. F.'s bidding.

Baltimore Boys Steal Ride Here In Freight Car

"Why?"

Electrocution Set Feb. 17 for Bostic

Bedtime Story

By Thornton W. Burgess.

Two Cousins Meet

Some relatives on sight fall out,
And know not what 'tis all about.
—Old Mother Nature.

Hooty the Great Horned Owl is a bird of the night, but that doesn't mean that it is only at night that he is abroad. Never make the mistake of thinking that Hooty cannot see in daylight. Any small persons in feathers or fur who make that mistake are likely never to have a chance to make the mistake a second time. Much depends on how hungry Hooty is. If he is half starved, as is frequently the case in winter, he often hunts in the daytime, especially if the day be not too bright.

Now Hooty lives in the Green Forest and he has certain hunting grounds that he feels belong to him. That is to say, he feels that he alone of his own kind has the right to hunt there, and other Owls are intruders.

While Hooty is a bird of the Great Forest, he does at times extend his hunting over the Green Meadows and often goes far beyond his own hunting grounds if food be scarce, but he prefers the woodlands to open country.

Quite the contrary is the preference of his cousin, Whitey the Snowy Owl. He prefers the open country where he can look in all directions for long distances. This is because his home is in the Far North, the land of snow and ice. So when Whitey is driven down from the Far North in search of food he prefers the open fields and the seacoast.

Whitey was spending most of his time on the snow-covered Green Meadows, with occasional visits to the Old Pasture. To him it made no difference whether it was day or night. He did quite as much hunting in the one as in the other. It was where the rail fence divides the Old Pasture from the Green Meadows that the two cousins met. Hooty had no luck in the Green Forest. He had decided to try the open country. He was not aware that Whitey had come down from the Far North. He alighted on a fence post and sat as still and straight as if he were a part of it.

Just a little way out on a low mound sat Whitey. He sat just as still and just as straight as Hooty. And because he was all white he looked like nothing more than a snow-covered stake. Hooty paid no attention to him. By and by over beyond Whitey a Mouse appeared on the surface of the snow. Hooty saw that Mouse and instantly was in the air. His great wings made no sound. He seemed to float, but float swiftly, toward that Mouse.

And then without sound a cloud of snow intervened between him and the Mouse. At least that is what it seemed like at first. Then Hooty realized that it wasn't snow at all but a bird of near his own size wearing a coat of soft white feathers. Of course it was his cousin. It was Whitey the Snowy Owl. Whitey alighted and faced Hooty. In Whitey's bill was the Mouse.

Hooty's great eyes fairly blazed with rage. "Drop it!" he screamed. "Drop that Mouse! Drop it I say!"

The answer was three quick gulps and the Mouse disappeared. Whitey's yellow eyes glared back at Hooty. "What are you going to do about it?" said he.

Hooty's reply was a swift attack with beating wings, great curved claws and stout hooked bill. Whitey met him with wings just as big and stout, curved claws just as large and sharp, and hooked bill to match his own. White feathers flew. Brown feathers flew. There was a vicious snapping of bills and a great hissing. Then they separated and glared at each other. It was a new experience for Hooty to find some one not only willing but eager to fight him. He had met his match, and he knew it. Here was some one he wouldn't be able to drive away.

WPA Aide Says He Was Asked To Aid Chavez

U. S. Rests Case After Last Witness Reveals Plea for Contribution

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Feb. 3 (AP). The Government abruptly rested its case in the WPA mass conspiracy trial late today and agreed to dismiss charges against Fred G. Healy, former State WPA administrator and one of 35 defendants charged with playing politics with relief.

Healy was dismissed by Harry L. Hopkins, then WPA administrator, last September 23.

The last Government witness, William S. Rundell, a former WPA supervisor, testified regarding a conversation with Stanley W. P. Miller, son-in-law of Senator Dennis Chavez and former Assistant United States District Attorney.

"He said the WPA organization was Senator Chavez's only help in Albuquerque, and asked if I would aid with contributions," Rundell told the jury.

Rundell said he asked Miller what E. A. Rose, then WPA zone supervisor, "thought about soliciting funds from WPA workers."

"Miller said," related the witness, "he didn't care what Rose thought, because if he interfered he would get his job, too."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Friday Morning Music Club presents Henry Kaspar, Ethel Garrett Kaspar and Irene Lerch, pianists, and Dorothy Tyler, soprano (Willa Semple, accompanist) in Barker Hall.

Music for two pianos dominated the program presented by the Friday Morning Music Club yesterday, and it was so capably performed as to afford pleasure to a large audience of members and guests. The executants were Henry Kaspar, who modestly chose the second piano for the arrangements of concerted works; Irene Lerch, his talented and steadily advancing pupil, and Ethel Garrett Kaspar. Their playing was excellently synchronized, and one's attention was particularly called to this accuracy because the instruments were so placed on the stage that the performers could not see each other.

Irene Lerch had the leading part in Bauer's arrangement of the Bach Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Ravel's transcription of Debussy's "Fetes," and Franck's "Variations Symphoniques." In these stylistically differing works, she displayed a fluent and clean technique, discriminating phrasing, and assurance in brilliant passages. Her interpretative feeling reached a real eloquence in the noble Franck variations.

Ethel Garrett Kaspar replaced Miss Lerch in the duo-piano team for a scintillant reading of the allegro movement from Gabriel Pierne's C minor concerto, which was followed by a vivacious performance of George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." While Mr. Kaspar was playing the orchestral part of the concluding "Grandioso" section, Mrs. Kaspar arose and paid a brief tribute to the composer.

Between the two piano groups, Dorothy Tyler sang the aria, "Plus grand dans son obscurite," from Gounod's "La Reine de Saba." Her reading was well phrased in the treatment of the melodic line and effectively shaded in emotional appeal.

Washington Music Teachers' Association presents Rudolph Reuter in a piano recital Friday evening in the Mayflower Hotel. Program: Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Mendelssohn), "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" (Bach), Scherzo from Sonata in A flat (Weber), Prelude, Chorale and Fugue (Franck), Ballade in A flat (Chopin), Intermezzo Op. 117, No. 4 (Brahms), Bagatelles (Cherepnin), "Ondine" (Ravel), Scherzo Op. 6 (Griffes), "La Maja y el Ruisenor" (Granados), Toccata (Debussy).

Taking advantage of Rudolf Reuter's brief presence in the city, the Washington Music Teachers Association advanced the date of their regular meeting and presented him to members and guests last evening in the East Room of the Mayflower Hotel. The distinguished American pianist was in a communicative vein and made his informal recital one to be remembered for its poetic disclosures as well as for its technical mastery. His program had several excursions into by-ways and rewarded his listeners with unfamiliar items.

In the same group with Mendelssohn's E minor prelude and fugue and the Bach chorale-prelude, "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," he introduced the scherzo from Weber's A flat sonata, possibly to remind the present generation that Weber's sonatas are not as dead wood as the radicals pronounce them to be. In another group, Chopin's A flat ballade and a Brahms intermezzo were made neighbors with the harmonically-spiced "Bagatelles" by Alexander Cherepnin.

His final group was the most unexpected of all in its juxtapositions, for it contained "Ondine" from Ravel's "Gaspard de la Nuit," Charles Templeton Griffes' "Bacchanale" scherzo, the colorful "La Maja y el Ruisenor" of Granados, and Debussy's toccata. For extra numbers he added the "Staccato" etude of Anton Rubinstein and a Chopin nocturne.

Mr. Reuter's command of the keyboard has virtuosic skill in dynamics and digital expertness. His playing has a wide range in color, while he is subtle in matters of interpretation. His sense of musical style is acute and his readings have the eloquence which comes from a precise handling of phrases.

Around the World Briefs

Denies Seeking Divorce

San Francisco, Feb. 3. (AP).—The collapse of the 27-year-old marriage of Tom and Rena Mooney was disclosed today as she charged the labor leader had demanded a divorce, and he retorted enemies had deliberately publicized the separation to discredit him.

Mooney, pardoned last month after 22 years in prison for the 1916 Preparedness Parade bombing, admitted the domestic rupture, but denied he had demanded a divorce.

Mrs. Mooney, 61, said she fought for her husband's freedom all during his imprisonment, and declared she would oppose a divorce because "we've been through too much to think of it."

"There will be no reconciliation," declared Mooney.

Palestine Parleys

London, Feb. 3.—The long delayed conferences on Palestine by which the British government will attempt to end the unofficial civil war waged by Arabs and Jews, will be opened by Prime Minister Chamberlain at St. James's Palace Tuesday.

The government will give the rival delegations only "a few weeks" to reach a peaceful solution, officials disclosed today. If negotiations drag and give no promise of success, the British will step in to force their own solution on Arabs and Jews alike.

Juliana Expects Baby

The Hague, Netherlands, Feb. 3 (U.P.).—Princess Juliana, heir to the throne of the Dutch Empire and wife of Prince Bernhard, is expecting another baby in August, it was announced today.

Ritz Bros. Make Peace

Hollywood, Feb. 3 (AP).—The Ritz brothers, movie comedians who refused to start work on "The Gorilla" last Monday because they objected to their roles as "unfavorable to their careers," have made peace with Twentieth Century-Fox, the studio announced tonight.

Mexican Actors to Tour

Mexico City, Feb. 3 (AP).—The Mexican government today announced it would send a theatrical trope on a tour of the United States, Europe and South America to give foreigners a "true picture" of Mexican art.

The show is scheduled to open March 27 in New York.

To Be 'Guinea Pig'

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 3 (U.P.).—Phillip Chaleff, youth whose death sentence recently was communted to a life term by Gov. Lehman, is to serve as a "human guinea pig" for a new treatment for diabetes, it was announced tonight.

Chaleff is reportedly critically ill of the disease at Sing Sing prison.

Dr. John S. Fiorella, experimenting with a treatment which he describes as a "circulatory stimulant," said his offer to treat Chaleff had been accepted by Lehman.

Pleads for Solidarity

Mexico City, Feb. 3 (AP).—Col. Fulgencio Batista, Cuba's strong man, began a 10-day good-will tour of Mexico today with a declaration that "solidarity of the Western Hemisphere should be the common concern of us all."

"The Americas cannot be indifferent to this world of restlessness and must be prepared for a decisive moment," he added, in an interview upon his arrival in Mexico City, where increased German and Italian trade activities have been reported recently. He urged that the United States, Mexico and Cuba maintain their close ties.

Senate Kills Proposal for Census Edifice

Committee Opposes $3,500,000 Fund For Structure

Taking the view that 7,500 workers needed for the census of 1940 can be housed in the present Department of Commerce Building, the Senate Appropriations Committee yesterday killed a $3,500,000 estimate for a new census building to be erected in Washington.

Senator Adams (Democrat), Colorado, who was in charge of the first deficiency bill, said that while the increase from 750 to 7,500 workers might necessitate a little crowding, "it happens only every ten years and is for only seven months."

If the $3,500,000 structure were erected, he declared, it would be used for the census only from July, 1940, to February, 1941, and then be utilized for a place to store Government records. "By the time 1950 rolled around, there would be no getting the records out and it would all be to do over again," he said.

Mrs. E. S. Coughlin Dies Here After Long Illness

Mrs. Ellen S. Coughlin, 67, widow of John T. Coughlin, formerly connected with the State Department, died yesterday at her home, 735 Quebec place northwest, after a long illness.

A native of Washington, she was a daughter of the late Henry and Mary Sauter.

Mrs. Coughlin is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Edward A. Murphy, wife of Lieut. Col. Murphy, Benecia Arsenal, Calif., and Mrs. Albert J. Wick, wife of Capt. Wick, Philadelphia, and two sons, Henry G. Coughlin, of this city, and Capt. Robert E. Coughlin, now on duty here.

Two District Naval Officers Affected by Shift in Asia

Rear Admiral John M. Smeallie, chief of staff of the scouting Force, was ordered yesterday to relieve Rear Admiral George J. Meyers in May as commandant of the Sixteenth Naval District, embracing the Philippines, with additional duty in command of the Navy at Cavite, Philippine Island.

Rear Admiral David M. LeBreton, commander of the Yangtze Patrol, will return to the United States for treatment at the Mare Island Naval Hospital. He has a fractured arm which refuses to heal.

Commander Charles D. Leffler, jr., will command the Yangtze Patrol until a relief can be sent from the United States.

Announcement was made of the selection of 16 medical officers for the next hgiher rank and of the appointment of three boards to select officers for advancement in the Naval Reserve.

Named for promotion to captain in the Navy Medical Corps were Commander William W. Wickersham, on duty at the Naval Dispensary here; Commander William H. Michael, of Belair, Md., attached to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery at the Navy Department; Commander John Harper, of the Naval Medical School, and Commander Paul Richmond, jr., of the aircraft carrier Ranger, whose home is at 4807 Iowa avenue here; Commander Joel T. Boone, former attending physician to President Hoover; Commander Frederick L. Conklin, Commander Ruskin M. Lhamon, Commander Walter A. Vogelsang, and Commander Elphege A. M. Gendreau. The following lieutenant commanders were selected for promotion to commander: Gilbert H. Larson, Charles F. Behrens, James J. O'Connor, Lloyd L. Edmisten, Robert E. Duncan.

Capt. Cecil S. Baker heads a board of officers appointed to recommend one officer of the Supply Corps Organized Reserve for promotion to captain and four officers of the Supply Corps Volunteer Reserve for advancement to commander. The board will meet February 13. Capt. Harry E. Harvey was named president of another board to select four volunteer dental officers for promotion to commander. The group convenes February 15.
